HĀFIZ

FIFTY POEMS
Texts and Translations Collected, Introduced and Annotated
by

A. J. ARBERRY.

CANSSIDER UNIVERSITY PRESS

FIFTY POEMS OF ḤĀFIZ

TEXTS AND TRANSLATIONS COLLECTED AND MADE, INTRODUCED AND ANNOTATED BY

ARTHUR J. ARBERRY

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Published by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press Bentley House, 200 Euston Road, London NWI 2DB American Branch: 32 East 57th Street, New York, N.Y.10022

ISBN: 0 521 04039 6

First published 1947 Reprinted with corrections 1953 Reprinted 1962, 1970, 1974

First printed in Great Britain at the University Press, Cambridge Reprinted in Malta by St Paul's Press Ltd

CONTENTS

Introduction	PAGE I
Texts	35
Translations	8 1
Notes	137
List of Translators	185
INDEX OF FIRST LINES	186

Thou who didst dwell where Ruknabad once ran Melodious beneath the Persian sky,
And watch with mind serene and steady eye
The tragic play that is the life of man;
And, seeing it was so since earth began
And shall continue after thou and I,
Being spent as swiftly as a lover's sigh,
Depart upon death's trackless caravan;
Out of dross sound by sovereign alchemy
Didst fashion melodies of liquid gold,
Creating riches of thy penury,
Transmuting death to immortality:
Accept these words that leave the whole untold,
And in fresh youth renew thy wisdom old.

I

TT is two hundred years since the birth of Sir William Jones (1746-1794), the father of Persian studies in the west; one century and three-quarters since the publication of A Persian Song, his celebrated translation which introduced Hāfiz of Shīrāz to the literary world of London and Europe. The present is thus a peculiarly opportune time to review what his successors have done in furthering the study and interpretation of this, the greatest lyric poet of Persia; the more so since it has long been desirable to furnish students with a text-book appropriate to their needs as beginners in the appreciation of Persian lyrical poetry. The selection now presented has been made with the double object of exhibiting the various aspects of Hafiz' style and thought, and of representing how English scholars have attempted to render his poetry in their own language. Lest it should be supposed that the work of two centuries has exhausted every aspect of the study of Hafiz, and that the last word on his interpretation has been said, these introductory remarks will suggest fresh approaches to the subject, and propose a number of lines along which future research might with advantage be directed.

Hāfiz is by universal consent the supreme master of the art of the Persian ghazal—a literary form generally equated with the lyric; though perhaps the sonnet is in some respects a closer equivalent. When it is considered that literary critics of undoubted authority have estimated Persian poetry as an important contribution to the art of self-expression in metre and rhyme, and the Persian ghazal as a form unsurpassable of its kind, it may be readily conceded that Hāfiz is a poet eminently worth study; and it may without undue optimism be conjectured that as a master of a splendid art-form he can still teach useful lessons to all who are interested in the evolution of poetic expression. If it is added, as a personal opinion, that Ḥāfiz' technique can by modified imitation inspire new developments in western poetry, perhaps a claim so extravagant will not be rejected so summarily as similar claims less solidly founded; for Ḥāfiz is as highly esteemed by his countrymen as Shakespeare by us, and deserves as serious consideration.

The Persians were not greatly interested in the lives of their poets, and consequently we have little reliable information on which to construct a biography of Ḥāfiz; though modern scholars have displayed great learning and ingenuity in attempting to recover the salient facts of his career. The student is recommended to consult the charming preface to Gertrude Bell's Poems from the Divan of Hafiz; the section on Ḥāfiz in E. G. Browne's Literary History of Persia; the introduction to Ḥusain Pezhmān's edition of the Dīvān; and, above all, the voluminous and profound study of the poet by Dr Qāsim Ghanī (Baḥth dar āthār u afkār u ahvāl-i Ḥāfiz) which is now appearing in Teheran. Not to duplicate what is readily accessible elsewhere, we confine ourselves here to the barest outline of the poet's life.

Shams al-Dīn Ḥāfiz of Shīrāz was born at the capital of the province of Fārs about the year 720/1320; some sixty years after the great catastrophe of Islamic history, Hūlāgū Khān's capture and sack of Baghdād; rather less than a century after the death of Muḥyī al-Dīn Ibn 'Arabī (d. 638/1240), the greatest theosophist of the Arabs; and fifty years after the death of Jalāl al-Dīn Rūmī (d. 672/1273), Persia's most original mystical poet. He grew up in an age when the finest Arabic literature had already been written, and in the shadow of the reputation of his distinguished fellow-citizen, Shaikh Sa'dī (d. 690/1291 or 691/1292). Persian poetry had thus reached its consummation in the romantic epic (Nizāmī probably died in 599/1202), the mystical mathnavī, the rubā'ī, the qaṣīda (Anvarī died between 585/1189 and 587/1191), and gnomic verse; Ḥāfiz spent little time on the qaṣīda and rubā'ī, and none at all on the other classical forms, but elected to specialize in the ghazal, no doubt supposing—and not without cause—that he had something to contribute to this most delicate of all poetic forms.

As a student, Hāfiz evidently learned the Qur'an by heart (for so his name implies), and his poetry proves that, like other Persian poets, he acquired a competence in all the Muslim sciences taught in his day; for the Persian poet must have learning as much as original genius. It seems likely that he was a man of no great substance, especially if we admit the evidence of a manuscript of the Khamsa of Amīr Khusrau of Delhi (d. 725/1325) now preserved in the State Library of Tashkent which bears a colophon stating that it was written by "the humblest of God's creatures Muhammad nicknamed Shams al-Hāfiz al-Shīrāzī" and completed on 24 Şafar 756/9 February 1355 (see A. A. Semenov's note in Sukhan, vol. 11, pp. 95-6); for only a relatively poor man would seek his bread by transcribing other men's poems for pay. It remained for him therefore to develop and perfect his God-given genius for song, and by soliciting the favour of wealthy and powerful patrons to emulate in the fourteenth century those already legendary figures of the twelfth who had risen in the courts of princes to great eminence and abundant riches, and yet secured the highest prize of all, immortality in the hearts and on the lips of succeeding generations. Wealth, as it seems, was destined to elude Hāfiz' grasp, for the age in which he lived was an age of insecurity and sudden catastrophe; but he achieved in full measure the ampler portion of eternal fame, even in lands whose very names were unknown in his day and among peoples speaking a language cognate with his own, yet never imagined in his mind.

Shīrāz, "a large and flourishing town with many riches and many inhabitants" (as the anonymous author of the Ḥudūd al-'ālam called it, writing towards the end of the tenth century), capital of the province of Fārs from which Persia obtained her name in the West, at the time of Ḥāfiz' birth formed part of the dominions of Sharaf al-Dīn Maḥmūdshāh of the Injū dynasty, a fief of the Mongol overlord Uljāitū and his successor Abū Sa'īd.

The territories about the city were infested with robber bands, to prevent whose depradations formed no small part of the cares of the ruler. The death of Abū Sa'īd in 736/1335 provided the youthful Hāfiz with his first personal experience of the transient nature of human glory; for his follower Arpa Khan had Mahmudshāh immediately put to death. There followed a struggle for power between his four sons, Jalāl al-Dīn Mas'ūdshāh, Ghiyāth al-Dîn Kaikhusrau, Shams al-Dîn Muḥammad and Abū Isḥāq Jamāl al-Dīn; Kaikhusrau was the first to pay the supreme penalty of unwise ambition (739/1339), to be followed to his grave the next year by Muhammad. Meanwhile Shīrāz passed into the hands of Pir Husain, the Chupanid princeling with whom Muhammad had conspired and who requited his confidence by slaying him; but the intruder had little joy of his filched possession; the infuriated populace drove him out, and when he would have returned the following year he fell out with a confederate and met his end. Mas'ūdshāh, the eldest of Maḥmūdshāh's sons, fell victim to an imprudent intrigue in 743/1343; and after a further bout of violence the youngest of the brothers, Abū Ishāq, at last succeeded in establishing his authority throughout Fars. We have a fragment of Hafiz (Brockhaus' edition of the Dīvān, no. 579), written many years after these events, in which the poet recalls the reign of "Shāh Shaikh Abū Isḥāq when five wonderful persons inhabited the kingdom of Fars"—the Shah himself, the chief judge of Shiraz Majd al-Din Isma'il b. Muhammad b. Khudādād (for whom see no. 50 of this selection), a certain Shaikh Amīn al-Dīn, the eminent theologian and philosopher 'Adud al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Aḥmad al-Ījī (d. 756/1355), and Hājjī Qiwām al-Dīn Ḥasan, a favourite of the Shāh, whose death in 754/1353 Hāfiz celebrated with a necrology (Brockhaus no. 610).,

Abū Ishāq was an ambitious man; having secured the mastery of Shīrāz and Fārs he sought to extend his dominion to embrace Yazd and Kirmān, and so brought himself into conflict with the neighbouring dynasty of the Muzaffarids. This house, founded by Sharaf al-Dīn Muzaffar (d. 713/1314) the fief successively of the Mongol Ilkhāns Arghūn, Ghāzān, and Uljāitū, had its capital at Maibudh near Yazd. Muzaffar was succeeded by his son Mubāriz al-Dīn Muḥammad, at that time a lad of thirteen; he grew into a resolute and ruthless ruler, taking Yazd in 718/1318 or 719/1319 and holding his petty empire in the face of bloody rebellion; profiting by the chaos that resulted from the death of Abū Sa'īd, in 740/1340 he annexed Kirmān. Twice Abū Isḥāq essayed to wrest Kirmān from the grasp of its new master, and twice he failed; in 751/1350-1 he tried his hand against Yazd, but was speedily repulsed; a third attempt at Kirmān ended in a signal defeat (753/1352). Mubāriz al-Dīn, encouraged by this final verdict, now took the offensive into the enemy's camp, and in 754/1353 he captured Shīrāz; he pursued his triumph, took Iṣfahān, and put his stubborn foe to death in 757/1356 or 758/1357.

It appears that Shīrāz did not greatly enjoy its change of rulers, for Mubāriz al-Dīn was a Sunnī zealot; the story of the closing of the wine-taverns, and Ḥāfiz' supposed reference to the event, may be read in Browne (Literary History of Persia, vol. 111, pp. 277-5). However, the conqueror did not long prevail in his new empire; for in 759/1358, while on a military expedition that had won for him the temporary possession of Tabrīz, he was made prisoner by his own son Shāh Shujā' and, after the barbarous fashion of those days, blinded; he died in 765/1364. Ḥāfiz does not appear to have esteemed it profitable to solicit the favour of the austere Mubāriz al-Dīn, though he has two poems in praise of his chief minister Burhān al-Dīn Fatḥ Allāh (Brockhaus, nos. 400, 571).

Shāh Shujā' enjoyed a relatively long reign, though he saw his share of fraternal envy and neighbourly rivalries. His brother Shāh Maḥmūd, who ruled over Abarqūh and Iṣfahān, in 764/1363 seized Yazd; to be in turn besieged in Iṣfahān until the two princes came to an understanding. The reconciliation was short-lived; the following year Maḥmūd allied himself to Uwais, the Jalā'irid ruler of Baghdād since 756/1355, and after laying siege to Shīrāz for eleven months captured the city, only to lose it again in 767/1366. Shāh Maḥmūd died in 776/1375, and thereupon Shāh Shujā' possessed himself of Iṣfahān. Uwais succumbed suddenly in the same year; and the lord of Shīrāz thought the moment opportune to enlarge himself towards Adharbāijān at the expense of Husain, the new sovereign of Baghdad. However, what success Shāh Shujā' achieved was soon undone when he found his nephew Shāh Yaḥyā conspiring against him; he renounced his spoils, made peace with Husain, and married his son Zain al-'Abidīn to the Baghdādī's sister. This was far from the end of trouble between the two neighbours; and when Ḥusain was murdered by his brother Aḥmad in 783/1381 the latter, confronted by the inevitable succession of hopeful pretenders, was glad to solicit the friendly support of Shāh Shujā', and to repudiate it as soon as his throne seemed secure. But meanwhile a cloud was gathering on the horizon that would presently grow into a storm sweeping all these petty conspiracies into ruin and oblivion. Timūr Lang, born at Kash in Transoxiana in 736/1336, had won his way through blood to the throne as "rightful heir" to Chaghatāi and true descendant of Chingiz; after ten years' wars of consolidation, he invaded Khurāsān in 782/1380-1, and within two years mastered Gurgan, Mazandaran and Seistan. Shah Shujā', recognizing the portents, bought the favour of the mighty conqueror with rich gifts and a daughter; death spared him further anxieties in 786/1384.

The reign of Shāh Shujā' saw the full blossoming of the flower of Ḥāfiz' genius. Being a man of more liberal views than his predecessor, he created the conditions indispensable to the free display of poetic talent; and though it is said that relations between the poet and his royal patron were at times lacking in cordiality (see Browne, op. cit. vol. III, pp. 280-2), Ḥāfiz immortalized him by name in four poems (cf. no. 28 of this collection and Brockhaus, nos. 327, 344, 346) and wrote a noble necrology for his epitaph (Brockhaus, no. 601); it is as certain as such conjectures can be that very many other poems in the Dīvān, though not naming Shāh Shujā' directly, were composed for him.

Future researchers may recover much from the obscure hints scattered up and down the poet's verses to shed new light on the dark history of these years in the chequered fortunes of Shīrāz.

Shāh Shujā' shortly before dying nominated his son Zain al-'Ābidīn 'Alī to rule over Shīrāz, and his brother 'Imād al-Dīn Ahmad to govern Kirman. 'Ali was immediately opposed by his cousin Shāh Yaḥyā b. Sharaf al-Dīn Muzaffar (Ḥāfiz courted him by name in five poems) who although subsequently reconciled lost his command of Isfahān and fled to Yazd. In 789/1387 'Alī, learning that his nominee at Isfahan, Muzaffar-i Kashi, had yielded before the approach of Timur, abandoned Shiraz for Baghdad and left it to Shah Yahya to make what terms he could with the formidable invader. The people of Isfahan were so imprudent as to kill Timūr's envoys, and expiated their rashness in a fearful massacre. Tīmūr declared Sulṭān Aḥmad the governor of Fārs, as well as Kirmān; then followed a bewildering series of events, characteristic of the kaleidoscopic nature of the destinies of those times. Zain al-'Ābidīn 'Alī on quitting Shīrāz had secured the friendship of his cousin Shāh Manşūr b. Sharaf al-Dīn Muzaffar at Shūshtar, but was almost immediately attacked and imprisoned by him. Shāh Manṣūr (whom Ḥāfiz complimented in a number of poems, including, according to some manuscripts, no. 37 of this selection) now walked into undefended Shīrāz; and when 'Alī, released by his jailers, made common cause with Shāh Yaḥyā and Sulṭān Aḥmad against him, Manşūr defeated the coalition and occupied all 'Irāq. 'Alī fled, but was captured by the governor of Raiy and handed over to Shāh Manṣūr, who ordered him to be blinded. Flushed with these successes, Manṣūr thought to match his fortunes against the dread Timūr's. It was an unlucky speculation. The mighty conqueror marched to the gates of Shīrāz, and there, after a desperate resistance, Manşūr fell. The rest of the Muzaffarids immediately declared their submission to Tīmūr; but their tardy realism secured them only a week's further lease of life, and in Rajab 795/March 1393 they were all executed.

Hāfiz had not lived to see the final ruin of the house that had patronized his genius and been immortalized in his songs. In the year 791/1389 (or, according to some authorities, 792/1390) he passed to the mercy of God, and discovered at last the solution to the baffling riddle of human life. His death took place in the beloved city that had given him birth; he lies buried in the rosebower of Muşallā, on the banks of the Ruknābād, so often celebrated in his poems; his grave is marked by a tablet inscribed with two of his songs.

Such, in brief outline, were the main events of fourteenth-century Fārs, so far as they affected Ḥāfiz' life. The legends of his relations with distant rulers, of his intended journey to India, of his debate with Tīmūr Lang, may be read in Gertrude Bell and the other biographers, for what they are worth; it is sufficient to say that we have no contemporary evidence for them, and that they rest in all likelihood upon no securer basis than the intelligent speculation of his readers in after times; modern criticism is perhaps entitled to make its own guesses with equal measure of certainty and uncertainty. What is indisputable is that these were the times in which the poet lived, and these the verses (or as much of them as are genuine, of which more hereafter) in which he expressed his reactions to the world about him. Being a near and interested witness of many transactions of great violence, and the incalculable destinies of kings and princes, he might well sing:

"Again the times are out of joint; and again
For wine and the loved one's languid glance I am fain.
The wheel of fortune's sphere is a marvellous thing:
What next proud head to the lowly dust will it bring?
Or if my Magian elder kindle the light,
Whose lantern, pray, will blaze aflame and be bright?
'Tis a famous tale, the deceitfulness of earth;
The night is pregnant: what will dawn bring to birth?
Tumult and bloody battle rage in the plain:
Bring blood-red wine, and fill the goblet again!"

2

It is said that in the year 770/1368-9 Hāfiz prepared a definitive edition of his poems. What truth there is in this tradition it is impossible now to decide; in any case we possess no manuscripts based upon this archetype; for all our transcriptions—they must surely run into many thousands scattered all over the worldprobably go back ultimately to the edition put out after the poet's death by his friend Muhammad Gulandam with a florid but singularly uninformative preface. Unless therefore the unexpected should happen, and beyond all reasonable hopes a manuscript or manuscripts turn up representing a tradition anterior to Gulandām's edition, we cannot get any nearer to the poems as Hāfiz himself wrote them than the text authorized after his death by a friend whose piety is unquestionable, but concerning whose scholarship and accuracy we are not in a position to form any judgement. The only other slight chance of escaping from this impasse, a slender one indeed, is to examine all the commentaries on the Dīvān (four in Persian and three in Turkish are known), every takhmis or tasdis (poems incorporating an ode of Hāfiz) composed by later poets, and every jung (commonplace book) and tadhkira (biographies) in which Hafiz is quoted, as well as every poem written since his time in which his verses are introduced by the figure known as tadmin; and it might well be found, at the end of all these labours, that we had still not progressed far beyond Gulandam.

Certainly well over a hundred printed or lithographed texts of Hāfiz have appeared, since the editio princeps issued by Upjohn's Calcutta press in 1791. Of these all but a very few represent a completely uncritical approach to the task of editorship. The best

I A takhmīs by Jamāl-i Lubnānī, a contemporary of Ḥāfiz, containing Brockhaus no. 59, was published by M. Minovi in Rūzgār-i Nau, vol. III, pt. i, pp. 43-4, using a British Museum manuscript dated 813-4/1410-1; the text there given has some remarkable variants not found in any copy of the Dīvān.

European edition is no doubt that of H. Brockhaus (Leipzig, 1854-63) which is based on the recension of the Turkish commentator Sūdī (d. 1006/1598) and includes a considerable part of his commentary. Several critical texts have been prepared in recent years by Persian scholars; of these the most reliable is that published at Teheran in 1320/1941 under the editorship of Mīrzā Muhammad Qazvīnī, E. G. Browne's friend and the doven of modern Persian studies, and Dr Qasim Ghani, whose valuable and comprehensive monograph on the life and times of Hāfiz has already been mentioned. The most serious drawback to this otherwise admirable and beautiful text—it is a reproduction of an excellent original written in calligraphic nasta'liq-is its deficient critical apparatus. As this text—referred to hereafter as MQ—is based on a comparison of no fewer than seventeen manuscripts, several of them exceedingly old, and has been made by two of the most eminent Persian scholars now living, I have not hesitated to use it in editing these selections. At the same time I have mentioned in the notes such textual variants as are to be found in the editions of Brockhaus (B), V. R. von Rosenzweig-Schwannau (3 vols., Vienna, 1858-64), called hereafter RS, Husain Pezhmān (=P, Teheran, 1318/1939), and (for a few poems, all so far published by this editor), Mas'ūd Farzād (=F).

The first and most fundamental problem attending the task of editing Hāfiz is to decide which of the poems attributed to him in the various manuscripts are genuine products of his pen. An indication of the complexity of this problem is provided by the following figures. The Calcutta 1791 edition contains 725 poems; Brockhaus printed 692; Pezhmān has 994 items, many of them marked as doubtful or definitely spurious. The editors of MQ have admitted 495 ghazals as unquestionably genuine, beside 3 qaṣīdas, 2 mathnavīs, 34 occasional pieces (muqaṭṭaʿāt) and 42 rubāʿīs—a total of 573 poems. Their austere editorship causes a number of popular favourites (popular rather in India and Europe than in Persia) to disappear, perhaps the best known of them being the jingle tāza ba-tāza nau ba-nau which

E. H. Palmer and Gertrude Bell made into pleasant English verses.

When the supposititious poems have been rejected, the next task is to determine what lines of each genuine poem are authentic; for very many of them have been inflated in the manuscripts, sometimes by as much as four or five couplets. This labour accomplished, it yet remains to establish the correct order of the lines of each poem—there is sometimes the wildest variation in this respect between the manuscripts. Finally, and in many ways most troublesome of all, we have to settle the innumerable problems of verbal variants.

There are a number of different reasons for this wide inconsistency between the manuscripts. To consider the spurious poems first: the explanation of this phenomenon is fairly simple; no doubt the prevailing cause is the desire of copyists at one stage or other of the transmission of the text to secure for their own inferior versifying an unmerited immortality by signing their products with Hafiz' name. This is the conclusion reached by all scholars who have looked at the problem, and not only in connexion with Hāfiz; for it is a very prevalent malaise of Persian literature. But it seems reasonable to suppose that this does not tell the whole story. It may well be, in the first place, that other poets, possibly in Hāfiz' lifetime even, used the same pen-name as the great master; and that lyrics by them, quite innocently confounded with the poems of the supreme Hafiz, have been diligently incorporated into the Dīvān. Again, it is not an impossible conjecture that, just as painters of great eminence in Persia are known to have signed the work of their pupils after making a few masterly retouches, so a celebrated poet would add to his income by teaching the craft to promising aspirants and would permit their "corrected" exercises to bear his name; he would be able during his lifetime to exclude such school specimens from the canon, but if they survived into later times there would be nothing but consummate literary taste to distinguish them from the poet's own work; and literary taste declined lamentably in the generations that followed Ḥāfiz, if indeed it ever existed to any marked extent among professional copyists. Lastly we have perhaps to reckon with a third group of spuria: poems written by Ḥāfiz himself—juvenilia and such-like—but rejected by him in the fastidiousness of his mature judgement. It would interest the scribe who worked for pay, especially if he had in prospect a wealthy but ill-educated patron, by dint of drawing on all these subsidiary sources to impress and please his master with "the largest and completest copy of Ḥāfiz' poems yet assembled"; and so the evil tradition of an inflated text, once securely founded, would continue into later times and ultimately gain the deceptive respectability of age.

The phenomenon of obtrusive lines calls for a rather different diagnosis. The chief causes of this blemish seem to be twofold. First, we may conjecture that men of parts, while reading a good and uninflated manuscript of Hāfiz, might amuse themselves by noting in the margin verses of other poets, in the same metre and rhyme, which seemed to them comparable and apposite; these annotations would of course be incorporated by a later scribe into the body of the text. Secondly, it is highly likely—and there are numerous passages in the $D\bar{\imath}\nu\bar{\imath}n$ which lend support to this supposition—that a considerable number of these extra lines go back to Hāfiz himself, and represent stages in his workmanship.

Verbal variants have their own variety of causes. Primarily there is the well-known carelessness of scribes, and, what is perhaps even more deplorable, their dishonesty; failing to understand a word or a phrase, they sometimes did not hesitate to bring their archetype within the range of their own limited comprehension. In the second place, these variants in many instances doubtless perpetuate the poet's first, second, third, or even fourth thoughts.

The foregoing analysis is not, the reader must believe, mere speculation; it is based upon a wide experience of manuscripts and a considerable apprenticeship in the trade of editing oriental texts; and chapter and verse could readily be quoted to illustrate every variety of contrariety and corruption. But this book is not the place to assemble materials of that nature; and we will leave the subject with a recommendation that future editors of Hāfiz should exercise their scholarship, not unprofitably, by classifying according to their causes the outstanding variants in the codices.

It will be useful to conclude this section of the preface by giving a few notes on the more important of the manuscripts used in the edition of MQ, and described fully in the introductory remarks of Mīrzā Muḥammad. From these details it may be easier for the future editor of Ḥāfiz, when he comes to collate the best copies in Europe, to compare their merits with those of the finest manuscripts in Persia.

KH. MS. belonging to Saiyid 'Abd al-Raḥīm Khalkhālī, of Teheran. Dated 827/1424. Reproduced (with numerous errors) in Khalkhālī's edition of 1306/1927. Contains 495 ghazals; no preface or qaṣīdas. (Note: This is the oldest dated copy of the Dīvān hitherto reported. The next oldest are B=Bodleian copy dated 843/1439 and CB=Chester Beatty copy dated 853/1449. The British Museum has a jung dated 813-4/1410-1 which is reported by M. Minovi to contain about 110 ghazals of Ḥāfiz.)

NKH. MS. belonging formerly to Ḥājj Muḥammad Aqā-yi Nakhjawānī of Ādharbāijān, presented by him to Dr Qāsim Ghanī. Undated, ca. 850/1446. Contains 495 ghazals; no preface or gaṣīdas.

R. MS. belonging formerly to Aqā-yi Ismā'īl Mir'āt, presented by him to Dr Qāsim Ghanī. Undated, "very near the time of Ḥāfiṣ". No preface or qaṣīdas.

[Note. Other old MSS. include the following. TM¹=copy dated 854/1450 in Majlis Library, Teheran. BM=British Museum copy dated 855/1451. BN=Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, copy dated 857/1453. TM²=Majlis Library, Teheran, copy dated 858/1454.]

3

"I am very conscious that my appreciation of the poet is that of the Western. Exactly on what grounds he is appreciated in the East it is difficult to determine, and what his compatriots make of his teaching it is perhaps impossible to understand." So, fifty years ago, wrote Gertrude Bell, Hāfiz' most felicitous translator; and nothing has appeared in print in the West since to give a clearer picture to the inquirer. It is unfortunately true that in classical Persian literature, literary criticism never progressed beyond a certain stage; and while we have some admirable analyses of the tropes and figures that are accounted elegant in Persian poetry, and intricate accounts of the numerous metres, of appreciation in the Western sense we possess practically nothing. When it comes to assessing the respective merits of the poets, and explaining in what their particular virtues consist, the tadhkira-writers, our principal informants, are all too prone to indulge in a mixture of fulsome applause and verbal nebulosity, and that naturally does not take us very far.

Modern Persian writers have, however, gone a good way towards supplying the deficiencies of their predecessors; they have essayed to apply the canons of Western criticism to their national poets, so far as these can be applied; and we know now at least what Hāfiz' compatriots six centuries after think of his poetry. To help forward this aspect of our study within the limits proper to our present purpose, we offer a translation of extracts from the writings of two contemporary scholars, of undoubted authority, and thoroughly representative of the best modern Persian criticism.

(1) Ridā-zāda Shafaq, Tārīkb-i adabīyāt-i Īrān (Tehran, 1321/1942), pp. 332-6.

"With the fine sensitivity and acute susceptibility which irradiate the Khwāja's poetry, it is remarkable how this liberal-hearted poet preserved the strength and serenity of his poetic imagination in the face of the bloody events of his time. All Persia was in the throes of insurrection and conflict; Fārs, and Shīrāz itself, did not escape this battle; and Ḥāfiz with his own eyes witnessed the slaying of kings, the devastation of houses, the wars of pretenders, even the quarrels between members of a single family, such as for instance the Muzaffarids; yet he seems to have regarded these events from some spiritual eminence as if they were the little waves of an ocean; his gaze was rather fixed on the unity of the ocean of nature, the meaning and purpose of the world. It is true that on occasion his mind rebelled, and in deep emotion he would say:

'What is this anarchy that I see in the lunatic sphere? I see all horizons full of strife and sedition.'

But he always returned to his mental composure, and sought for tranquillity of heart in a world tumultuous beneath the wings of his broad, celestial thoughts.

"This mystical steadfastness of Hāfiz is apparent even in his qaṣīdas; he belongs to that class of poets who rarely indulged in panegyric, was never guilty of hyperbole. He was not the man to flatter for flattery's sake; he never surrendered his steadfastness of purpose. Though every prince in his turn was powerful and all-conquering, Hāfiz never debased his language, nor transgressed the bounds of legitimate applause. He did not hesitate on occasion to proffer counsel, reminding them in penetrating and moving verses of the truth that every man in the end gets his deserts, that fate rewards and punishes every act, and reckons king and beggar equal and alike.

"Hāfiz' spiritual greatness and mental power proceeded from that mystical consciousness which in him attained perfection. That path of life of which Sanā'ī, 'Attār, Jalāl al-Dīn and Sa'dī had spoken each in turn and in his own way, was by Hāfiz described in language that plumbs the depths of feeling and soars to the heights of expression. Subjects of which others had spoken in detail, in his choice, brief lyrics found better and sweeter treatment. So deeply immersed was he in the mystic unity, that in every ode and lyric, whatever its formal subject, he included one or more verses expressive of this lofty theme. This indeed is perhaps the greatest individual feature of Ḥāfiz' poetry; and it was by reason of this very immersion in the Unity that he had no time for the world's plurality, for differences of faith, and all vain disputes and enquiries:

'Excuse the war of all the seventy-two sects; as they have not seen the truth, they have plundered on the highway of legend.'

"Because he loved truth, sincerity and unity, Ḥāfiz railed against every manner of conflict and discord. He was especially pained and distressed by trifling quarrels and superficial differences, by the hypocrisy and imposture of false ascetics. He criticized bitterly those hypocritical Ṣūfīs who claimed to be following his own path but were in reality worldly men, parading their rags and making a display of their poverty. He had no desire to be numbered among them:

'The fire of deceit and hypocrisy will consume the barn of religion; Ḥāfiz, cast off this woollen cloak, and be gone!'

Perhaps in this respect, namely in detestation and revolt against hypocrisy and imposture, no other Persian poet has equalled Hāfiz.

"His true mastery is in the lyric (ghazal). In Ḥāfiz' hands the mystical lyric on the one hand reached the summit of eloquence and beauty, and on the other manifested a simplicity all its own. As we have already said, in short words he stated ideas mighty and subtle. Quite apart from the sweetness, simplicity and conciseness which are apparent in every lyric of Ḥāfiz, a spirit of genuine sincerity pervades every line. It is evident that the master's lyrics come straight from the heart; each poem is a subtle expression of the poet's innermost thoughts. It was by virtue of this same faith that the poet turned away and shrank from every kind of superficiality, that he rent to pieces the snare of trickery and deceit, and rejected the outward ornaments of the faiths and sects, upbraiding in his verses all hypocrites—shaikhs, ascetics and Ṣūfīs alike.

"Especially in his lyrics, Hāfiz in addition to the spark he borrowed from the fire of the ghazals of 'Attar and Rumi, also took something from the style of his own age. In this respect he shewed himself a disciple particularly of the style of such predecessors and contemporaries as Sa'dī, Khwājū, Salmān-ī Sāvajī, Auhadī and 'Imād-i Faqīh; many of the master's verses and lyrics are parallel to theirs. [The author here quotes a few examples of such parallelisms.] Yet for all this Hafiz was by no means content to be a mere imitator: he had his own style, and imparted a new lustre to the words. If his poetry is more often quoted than that of Khwājū and Salmān, this is due not solely to his spirituality, his greatness and his mystical influence; its celebrity is explained in part by the sweetness of his melody and the fluency and firmness of his verse. The poet himself, with that fine talent, that subtlety of taste and gift of revelation which he indisputably possessed, was well aware of the merit of his own composition, and it was in full and sure belief that he said:

'O Ḥāfiz, I have not seen anything lovelier than thy poetry; (I swear it) by the Qur'an thou hast in thy bosom.'

Indeed Hāfiz, with that high talent, spiritual subtlety, natural gift of language, minute meditation, mystical experience and passionate gnosis which were vouchsafed to him, evolved such a construction of words and a mingling of varied expressions and ideas that he created an independent style and characteristic form of mystical lyric; so much so that connoisseurs of Persian literature can immediately recognize his poetry and identify his accent.

"In addition to his inventive gift of weaving words together and giving ideas expression, Hāfiz used special words and technical terms which he himself innovated, or which, if already used by others, find ampler display in his vocabulary. Examples of these are the words tāmāt (idle talk), kharābāt (taverns), mughān (Magians), mughbachche (young Magian), khirqa (mystic's cloak), sālūs (hypocrite), pīr (elder), hātif (heavenly voice), pīr-i mughān (Magian elder), girānān (weighty ones), raṭl-i girān (bumper), zannār (girdle), ṣauma'a (monastery), zāhid (ascetic), shāhid (beauty), tilasmāt (talismans), dair (abbey, tavern), kinisht (church).

"In composing his poetry Hāfiz used various rhetorical figures such as īhām (amphibology), murā'āt-i nazīr (parallelism), tajnīs (play on words), tashbīb (simile) and the like, though he had a special partiality for īhām. [Some examples are quoted.] He borrowed some of the similes common to the poets, such as comparing the hair with unbelief, a chain, a hyacinth, a snare, a noose, a snake; the brow with a bow; the stature with a cypress; the face with a lamp, a rose, the moon; the mouth with a rosebud, a pistachio. But this kind of obvious artifice has not lessened the natural effect of his words. It is also possible to find in Hāfiz' compositions allusions and proverbs derived from the popular language; for example, 'beating the drum under the blanket' as an allusion to hiding something which cannot be concealed, as in the following verse:

'My heart is weary of hypocrisy and the drum under the blanket; O happy moment, when I hoist the standard at the wine-tavern."

(2) Mīrzā Muḥammad Qazvīnī, preface to Qāsim Ghanī, Baḥth dar āthār u afkār u aḥvāl-i Ḥāfiz, vol. 1 (Tehran, 1321/1942), pp. iv-ix.

"I remember one day we were talking about the poets of Persia, and Dr Ghanī asked me whom I considered to be the greatest of them. 'As is well known', I replied, 'poetry is made up of two elements—words, and meaning. The true poet and skilled artificer maintains a proper balance between the two factors of words and meaning, and does not exceed or fall short in respect of either. That is, he does not devote himself more than is necessary to beautifying his words and ornamenting his expressions, by employing elegant verbal artifices such as tajnīs (play on words), ishtiqāq (prosonomasia), shibh-i ishtiqāq (quasi-prosonomasia), tarṣī' (correspondence), takrīr (repetition), qalb (anagram), taṣḥīf (change of points), taushih (acrostic), siyaqat al-a'dad (proposition of multiples), luzum mā lā yalzam (double rhyme), letters 'uṭl (unpointed) and manque (pointed), muttasil (joined) and munfasil (unjoined), and similar devices that are more like children's pastimes than rules governing elegant prose and poetry for serious men. Neither does the true poet so concern himself with refining his meaning by indulging in fine-spun fancies, involved ideas, highly abstruse similes and unintelligible references as to com-plicate his language and obscure his intention, making it necessary for the hearer to think hard guessing what he is driving at—such for example as characterizes the so-called 'Indian' poets. Moreover, he does not exaggerate the employment of such elegant artifices as murā'āt al-nazīr (parallelism), tibāq (matching), ībām (amphibology), ibhām (ambiguity), tafrī' (evolution), istiṭrād (feigning), talmib (allusion), jam' (combination), taqsim (discrimination) and the like, to the point of overloading his expression and fatiguing the hearer. It is obvious of course that the skilful use of any of these artifices, either singly or in combination with one or two others, contributes definitely to elegance of style; but when these devices are multiplied to excess, and above all when a number of them are crowded together in a single verse, or in close proximity, they produce an exceedingly artificial appearance and are in fact an affront to the very art of poetry; and they will end by wearying and exhausting the audience.

"'If we study the works of all the Persian poets of the first class, attentively, it will become clear that every one of them, in addition to his own inborn faculty and God-given genius, has paid scrupulous observance to this point, namely, the maintenance of a balance between words and meanings, and the avoiding of excess or deficiency in either respect. Nevertheless one can divide them into two quite distinct and different groups.

"The first group consists of those poets whose style is quite simple and natural, free of all formal ornament and verbal decoration, devoid of every kind of artificiality and extravagance...Prominent representatives of this school are, first, Firdausī, Khaiyām and Jalāl al-Dīn Rūmī; and secondly, most of the very old poets of the Ṣaffārid, Sāmānid and early Ghaznavid periods, such as Ḥanzala, Bādghīsī, Fīrūz-i Mashriqī, Abū 'l-Mu'ayyad-i Balkhī, Shahīd-i Balkhī, Rūdakī, Abū Shukūr-i Balkhī, Daqīqī, Rābi'a-i Qizdarī-i Balkhī, Abū Ṭāhir-i Khisravānī, Shākir-i Bukhārī, Labībī, Zainatī-i 'Alavī, 'Imāra-i Marvazī, Manṭiqī-i Rāzī, Kisā'ī-i Marvazī, and the like. Unhappily most of the poetry of these has been lost, but from what is preserved in the biographies and dictionaries and certain histories it is very clearly possible to conjecture that they were all very great poets of the first class....

I For an explanation of these terms see E. G. Browne, Literary History of Persia, vol. II, pp. 47-82.

"'Most of the first class Persian poets from the fifth and sixth (11-12th) centuries down to the present day—such as Farrukhī, 'Asjadī, 'Unṣurī, Ghaḍā'irī, Minūchihrī, Mukhtārī, Lāmi'ī-i Gurgānī, Mas'ūd-i-Sa'd-i Salmān, Sanā'ī, Mu'izzī, Adīb-i Ṣābir, Abū'l-Faraj-i Rūnī, Anvarī, Saiyid Ḥasan-i Ghaznavī, 'Am'aq-i Bukhārī, Khāqānī, Zāhir-i Fāryābī, Sharaf al-Dīn-i Shafurva, Jamāl al-Dīn Muḥammad ibn 'Abd al-Razzāq-i Iṣfahānī, his son Kamāl al-Dīn Ismā'īl, Athīr-i Akhsikatī, Athīr-i Ūmānī, Shaikh 'Aṭṭār, Sa'dī, Ḥāfiz and Jāmī—are all of the same class of poets, different at most more or less in the degree to which they have observed the aforementioned points.'

"After this statement, Dr Ghani asked, 'Suppose for instance we now wish to choose from among all these masters of the first class, including every variety and group, moderns and ancients alike, and suppose we intend to exhibit before the world the greatest of them all—whom would you choose?'

"This was my answer. 'The reply to this question has been generally agreed on for centuries, and the problem has been finally disposed of. Despite all differences of individual inclination and preference, despite the general divergence of opinion entertained by people on most matters, practically all are agreed on this one question; that the greatest poets of the Persian language since the coming of Islam to the present time (each one in his special variety) are the six following—Firdausī, Khaiyām, Anvarī, Rūmī, Sa'dī, Ḥāfiz. In my view, one can confidently add to these six the great philosopher Nāṣir-i Khusrau, since all the characteristic merits and artistic qualities that have established these six in the front rank of Persian poets are completely and in every respect present in the person of Nāṣir-i Khusrau...In my opinion Nāṣir-i Khusrau yields the palm to none of the six masters mentioned, with perhaps the possible exception of Ḥāfiz.'

"Again Dr Ghanī persisted in his inquisition. 'If,' he said,

"Again Dr Ghani persisted in his inquisition. 'If,' he said, 'for the sake of example, some foreign country, say England, proposed to us that it was desired to erect a statue—in Hyde Park maybe—to the greatest poets of every nation on earth—the greatest, that is, by the general consensus of his compatriots—and that only one poet, and no more, was to be chosen by each nation; which of these six would you personally select as being in your view, and that of most men, the most truly poetical of the poets of Persia?'

"'In my view,' I answered, 'and I think this view coincides with the opinion held by the great majority of Persian scholars, as well as by non-Persians who have either known Persian or become acquainted with Ḥāfiz through the medium of translations, it may be that out of all the Persian poets of the first class—I have already named a great number of them to my good friend, and I leave you to find the names of the rest in the biographies and anthologies—without any exception whatsoever, the man whose poems embrace and contain every beauty alike of language and meaning to be found in poetry, every quality of image and reality that exists in fine speech, and who is at the same time the most eloquent and melodious writer of every age, ancient and modern included, the man who, compared with all the poetic stars of the first magnitude, is as a shining sun—without any doubt or hesitation that man is Khwāja Shams al-Ḥaqq wa'l-Milla wa'l-Dīn Muḥammad Ḥāfiz-i Shīrāzī, may God sanctify his great soul! As another great poet, Jāmī, who was also almost his contemporary, declares in his Bahāristān, his poetry, with all its sweetness, delicacy, freshness, ease, elegance, flow, agreeableness and unaffectedness, is something very near a miracle; it is a just object of pride not only for Persians, it is a source of glory for all mankind."

4

The origin of the art-form chosen by Hāfiz to be his particular medium is wrapped in the obscurity of age; it remains a fascinating problem for the researcher to discover what exact process of evolution led ultimately to the perfect type familiar to us in his poems. One theory points to the "erotic prelude" (nasīb) which forms a constituent part of the characteristic ode of ancient Arabia, and suggests that in time this element was isolated into an independent unit, thus creating the ghazal. Alternatively it is argued that the ghazal is descended from some kind of lyrical poetry current in the courts of pre-Islamic Persia; but as no specimen of any such verse has been preserved this conjecture, attractive as it is, cannot command unconditional consent. What seems tolerably certain is that this form of poetry was always associated with music, that in fact it was designed to be sung; and it is natural to suppose that this very circumstance to a great extent determined the shape of the verses. It would be dangerous to place too much reliance on the references in classical Persian poetry to the sung poem at the palace of the old Persian kings. such for instance as the well-known passage in the Khusrau u Shīrīn of Nizāmī where Bārbad is credited with composing to thirty varieties of melody whose names are given; but it would be equally dangerous to dismiss these references entirely as pure fiction. Perhaps we have in fact to deal here with multiple origins; the Persian ghazal may be a product of that cross-fertilization of Iranian genius by the imported culture of Arabia which produced so many remarkable manifestations of the human spirit.

Whatever the truth of this matter may be, we are on solid ground when we examine the Arabic lyrics of the 'Abbāsid age and declare that these are the models used, and improved upon, by the later Persian poets. Leaving aside the suggestion that this poetic form even in Arabic was introduced by Persian minstrels reviving at the court of the Caliphs a tradition founded by their ancestors at the court of the Chosroes, we do not lack for parallels in the poetry of the school of Abū Nuwās to the simple, unmystical lyric of the early Persian poets. The reader familiar with the Persian lyric would be hard put to it to say whether the originals of the following poems were written in Persian or Arabic; they were in fact all Arabic.

THE SOLITARY TOPER

I sat alone with the wine-cup lip to lip,
We whispered together, and made us mighty free:
Right merry a fellow is wine, when a man would sip
And there is none that will bear him company.
Oh, I quaffed and quaffed the cup to my heart's delight.
Myself the saki, myself the toper, and all;
And I swear that never did eye behold a sight
One half so charming, and so fair withal.
And all the while, lest the evil eye should see,
I breathed in the beaker magic and sorcery.

(ABŪ NUWĀS)

NIGHTS OF JOY

Ah, many the long night thou and I
Have passed at ease with the wine-crowned cup,
Till the red dawn gleamed in the night-dim sky
And the stars of morn in the east rose up,
And along the west the stars of night
Like defeated armies pressed their flight.

Then the brightest of joys were ours to gain. With never a care in the world to cloud, And pleasure untouched by the hand of pain, Were delight with eternal life endowed:
But alas! that even the fairest boon
Is doomed, like night, to be spent too soon.

(IBN ZAIDŪN)

WINE AND ROSES

"Bring wine!" I said;
But she that sped
Bore wine and roses beautiful.
Now from her lip
Sweet wine I sip,
And from her cheeks red roses cull.
(IBN ZAIDŪN)

FOUR THINGS

Four things there be that life impart
To soul, to body and to heart:—
A running stream, a flowered glade,
A jar of wine, a lovely maid.

(ABŪ NUWĀS)

THE FIRST KISS

I begged for a kiss, and she gave it me, But with long refusal, and urging on. Then I said, "Tormentor, generous be— One more kiss, and my thirst is gone!"

She smiled, and spake me a proverb wise
Every Persian knows is true:
"Yield not one kiss to the young man's sighs:
For the next he will plague and pester you!"

(ABŪ NUWĀS)

A PRETTY JADE

'Tis a tender, pretty jade,
And my heart would fain possess her;
Never lovelier form was made—
Ask of them that can assess her!
God created her to be
A bane for poor mortality.

Pearls upon the air she flings
When her ruby lips are singing;
See her fingers on the strings,
Hear the rebec proudly ringing!
Cautiously I veil my sight
Lest her radiance blind me quite.

All my heart's desire is she: O, that she might care for me!

(ABŪ NUWĀS)

These were the songs Rūdakī and his contemporaries knew when they fashioned the ghazal that was to become a peculiarly Persian form of poetry, and thereafter to exercise a profound influence on the poetry of Turkey and Muslim India. Unfortunately all but a few scattered quotations of these early Persian lyrics perished in the holocaust of the Mongol invasion, and what remains is far too insufficient to enable us to trace in detail the evolution of this art-form. We cannot say for certain when and by whom the convention of the takhallus (pen-name and signature) was created; Sanā'ī (d. c. 545/1150) used it freely, but not invariably; Farid al-Din 'Attar (d. 627/1230) has it in all his lyrics (he signs himself sometimes 'Attar and sometimes Farid); by the time of Sa'dī (d. 690-1/1291-2) the practice is thoroughly established. Similarly we cannot now determine the origins of the various conventional images of the Persian lyric-rose and nightingale, candle and moth, etc., etc.—and of all the familiar similes repeated with variations a thousand times by the classical poets. Here are subjects eminently suitable for further research; the researcher will need to extend his studies over the whole of Arabic as well as Persian lyrical poetry if he is to achieve anything like finality in his conclusions.

A further topic urgently requiring investigation—and this theme is particularly vital for the understanding and appraisal of Hāfiz' use of the lyric—is the development of the mystical connotation of the conventional figures. The tradition was certainly ancient in Ḥāfiz' time, and there are plentiful traces of it in the old Ṣūfī poetry in Arabic; while the celebrated Ibn al-Fāriḍ (d. 632/1235) uses a fully developed system, as of course does Ibn 'Arabī (d. 638/1240) in his poetry. In Persian we find the convention firmly established already in the lyrics of Sanā'ī, as the following examples shew.

LOVE'S PRISONER

Thy beauty is my being's breath, Thy majesty my fond pride's death; Where'er thou art, my sweetest fair, All life's felicity is there.

Loving thy loveliness divine, Thy smile more potent far than wine, All languid as thy slumb'rous eye Intoxicated here I lie.

Ah, but thy finger-tips to kiss—
That were a more than earthly bliss,
Which to achieve were greater gain
Than monarch o'er both worlds to reign.

Anguished I yearn thy lips to touch; Was ever heart's distraction such?—A heart held firm and motionless A prisoner of thy scented tress.

Thy mouth, the huntsman of my mind, Plots with thy locks my heart to bind; And how shall time unspring the snare That keeps me fast and fettered there?

ROSES BLOOM

The nightingale hath no repose For joy that ruby blooms the rose; Long time it is that Philomel Hath loved like me the rosy dell.

'Tis sure no wonder if I sing Both night and day my fair sweeting: Let me be slave to that bird's tongue Who late the rose's praise hath sung.

O saki, when the days commence Of ruby roses, abstinence By none is charged: then pour me wine Like yonder rose incarnadine.

LOVE'S OCEAN

Moslems all! I love that idol
With a true and jealous zeal;
Not for dalliance, but bewildered
In amazement here I kneel.

What is Love? A mighty ocean, And of flame its waters are, Waters that are very mountains, Black as night, and swarming far.

Dragons fierce and full of terror Crouch upon its waveswept rim, While a myriad sharks of judgement In its swelling billows swim.

Grief the barque that sails those waters,
Fortitude its anchor is,
And its mast is bent and tossing
To the gale's catastrophes.

Me they cast in sudden transport
Into that unfathomed sea
Like a man of noble spirit
Garmented in sanctity.

I was dead; the waters drowned me; Lo, the marvel, now I live And have found a gem more precious Than the treasured worlds can give.

It is beyond the scope of this fragmentary study to trace the development of the mystical ghazal in the writings of 'Aṭṭār, Rūmī, Sa'dī, 'Irāqī and the rest of Ḥāfiz' predecessors; and we must regretfully leave the full investigation of this fascinating subject to another occasion, or another inquirer.

5

Hāfiz found in the ghazal a well-developed art-form; it had been an instrument of many famous poets, each of whom had contributed in his turn something towards its evolution. Limited by circumstance and tradition to a comparatively short length convenient for singing, it had begun its life as a poem of love and wine; the Ṣūfīs had exploited its libertine reputation in their quest for worldly shame, until the allegory had come finally to dominate the simple reality. This new treatment of the form, that must have seemed startlingly novel at first, was not long in fossilizing into a hard convention; the miraculous facility of Sa'dī's style might well have rendered further development impossible. The problem

Ḥāfiz faced was similar in its own way to that which confronted Beethoven—how to improve upon the apparently perfect and final; Ḥāfiz' solution was no less brilliantly original than Beethoven's.

Just as Beethoven's earliest compositions strikingly resemble the mature Haydn, so Ḥāfiz in his first period is perfect Sa'dī. It is only natural to suppose that the young poet was captivated by the legend of the most famous singer Shīrāz had ever produced; he must have been eager to learn every detail of his fame from the lips of those still living who had seen and heard him; to his youthful spirit it may well have seemed the acme of ambition to imitate his flawless style. Though his editor Gulandām, by following the tradition of arranging his poems alphabetically according to rhyme, destroyed all vestiges of a chronological sequence, it is still possible within certain limits to assign the ghazals to definite periods in the poet's life; further research will doubtless establish a more exact precision in this respect than we have yet achieved.

The outstanding characteristic of the poems of Hafiz' first period is that each deals with a single theme. This theme is elaborated to the poet's content and satisfaction; but he does not introduce—as he always did later—a second or a third theme to combine with the first; much less (as we find increasingly in the last period) does he make brief and fragmentary references to themes (for it was only after his fame had been established and his style become known that he could afford such refinements and be confident of remaining intelligible). A second point to note in the early poems is the complete absence of that distinctive philosophy which is the invariable accompaniment of his mature compositions: what may be epitomized as the doctrine of unreason, the poet's final answer to the inscrutability of fate, the utter incapacity of man to master the riddle of the universe. Thirdly, and as a natural corollary of the preceding point, we find in these products of early manhood very little of the Sūfī allegory—love in them is human love, wine is the red wine of the grape. In the present selection this early period seems to be represented by nos. 10, 16, 26, 27, 30, 49.

Hāfiz' second or middle period is marked by two important developments, the one relating to "words" and the other to "meaning" (to borrow the terminology of the Persian critics). The poet has found the escape for which he had been looking to rescue him from the impasse of Sa'dī's technical perfection. Hitherto the ghazal had treated only one theme at a time, and had measured perfection in relation to the variations composed upon that single subject. In the works of many of the older poets (and Sa'dI himself is not wholly exempt from this fault), the interest and ingenuity of the variations tended often to overshadow the significance of the theme itself; as a result the poem would cease to be an artistic unity; it would grow longer and longer; and there would be little difficulty for the critic actually to improve upon the poet's performance by pruning away the luxuriance of his imagination. Even in his younger days Hafiz had always possessed too fine a critical sense to sacrifice unity on the altar of virtuosity; the new technique which he now invented depended wholly for success upon a rigid artistic discipline and an overwhelming feeling for shape and form.

The development in "words" (or, as we should say, poetic technique) invented by Hāfiz was the wholly revolutionary idea that a ghazal may treat of two or more themes, and yet retain its unity; the method he discovered might be described (to borrow a term from another art) as contrapuntal. The themes could be wholly unrelated to each other, even apparently incongruous; their alternating treatment would be designed to resolve the discords into a final satisfying harmony. As the poet acquired more and more experience of his new technique he was able to introduce further exciting innovations. It was not necessary to develop a theme to its logical conclusion at all; fragments of themes could be worked into the composition without damage to the resulting unity. It was the more easy to accomplish these experiments because convention had produced a regular repertory of themes—to which Ḥāfiz added a few of his own creation—and the audience would immediately recognize a familiar subject from the barest reference to it.

This brings us to Hāfiz' second development, that in "meaning". We have referred already (and shall refer frequently in the notes) to what we have called his philosophy of unreason, which constitutes the central core of the poet's message. It is not of course suggested that Hafiz was the first Persian to discover, or to teach, that life is an insoluble mystery; the doctrine is implicit in the pessimism of 'Umar Khaiyam, the mysticism of Rumi, even the pragmatism of Sa'dī; its roots are deeply grounded in both Neoplatonism and the transcendental theism of the Qur'an, those twain fountain-heads of Sūfī theosophy. What Hāfiz did was rather to isolate this element from the mass of related and unrelated matter in which he found it embedded, and to put it forward as the focal point from which all theory, and all experience too, radiated. It was his justification for rejecting alike philosophy and theology, mosque and cloister, legalistic righteousness and organized mysticism; it enabled him to profess his solidarity with the "intoxicated" Şūfīş like martyred Ḥallāj, and to revive the dangerous antinomianism of the Malāmatīs; but above all it provided him with a spiritual stronghold out of which he could view with serene equanimity, if not with indifference, the utterly confused and irrational world in which it was his destiny to live. Indeed it is scarcely surprising that Hāfiz should have found his only comfort in this doctrine, for the events he witnessed, and still more the events of which he must have heard all too much in his childhood—the Mongol devastations and massacres—were sufficient to shatter all belief in a reasonable universe, and to encourage the most pessimistic estimate of the significance of the individual life. We who have witnessed two world-wide wars, and have survived into what the journalists so appositely call the atomic age, are well placed to understand Hafiz, and to appreciate the motives underlying his doctrine of intellectual nihilism. We can even understand how profoundly his philosophy differs from the hearty hedonism with which it has sometimes been confounded; the world's tragedy is too profound to be forgotten in unthinking mirth; and man for all his littleness and incapacity need not be unequal to the burden of sorrow and perplexity he is called upon to shoulder. Indeed, by abandoning the frail defences of intellectual reasonand yielding himself wholly to the overwhelming forces of the spirit that surround him, by giving up the stubborn, intervening "I" in absolute surrender to the infinite "thou", man will out of his abject weakness rise to strength unmeasured; in the precious moments of unveiled vision he will perceive the truth that resolves all vexing problems, and win a memory to sustain him when the inevitable shadows close about him once more.

INTRODUCTION

The middle period of Ḥāfiz' artistic life—the period of his greatest productivity—was devoted to the working out of these two developments and their exploitation in a wide variety of forms. It should be remembered that all the time the poet was under the necessity of earning a livelihood; and this aspect of his poetry should not be neglected in any broad review. The praise of patrons, and the poet's own self-applause, are readily explained by the hard circumstances of his life, even if to Western taste they form the least attractive features of his work. In any case, as Persian critics have justly remarked, patron-flattery plays a far smaller part in Ḥāfiz' poetry than in that of any other courtminstrel, and his panegyric has little of the extravagance that characterizes so much of Persian literature.

The salient feature of the third and last period of Ḥāfiz' work is an increasing austerity of style, coupled with a growing tendency towards obscurity and allusiveness. It is as though the poet was growing weary, or perhaps feeling a distaste for the display of virtuosity; and having established his philosophy and perfected his technique, he was now experimenting in a sort of surrealist treatment of the gbazal. The poems of this period are comparatively few in number, but they are in many ways the poet's most interesting productions; they will repay extended study, for they are quite unique in Persian literature, and have perhaps never been fully understood and appreciated; certainly no later poet seems to have attempted to continue these final experiments of the master craftsman. In this selection the third period is probably represented by nos. 15, 20, 33, 42, 46, 47.

INTRODUCTION

6

If the analysis of Ḥāfiz' style given in the preceding section is anywhere near the truth—and the reader must be advised that no such reconstruction has, so far as the writer is aware, previously appeared in print—it necessarily follows that future translators of the poet will need an entirely fresh approach to their task from that which seems to have satisfied all his previous interpreters. To give an account of the methods followed by these interpreters, and of how they qualified for their undertaking, would expand these prefatory remarks unduly; their products, or typical specimens of them, may be studied here side by side with the originals; for the rest, the enquirer may if he desires consult three short articles contributed by the writer to the Persian periodical Rūzgār-i Nau (vol. Iv, pt. 1, pp. 82-7; pt. 2, pp. 52-5; pt. 3, pp. 41-5), as well as a monograph published in Islamic Culture (April-July, 1946).

In the new versions offered here for the first time the attempt has been made to apply the new approach to Hāfiz to the task of translation. These versions are in the nature of an experiment, and are by no means uniform in design; it is hoped that they may serve their purpose of stimulating further trials. From what has been said it will be apparent that Hāfiz presents unusually difficult, if not insoluble, problems to the translator; these problems have not deterred the bold in the past, and they will assuredly not discourage the adventurous in the future.

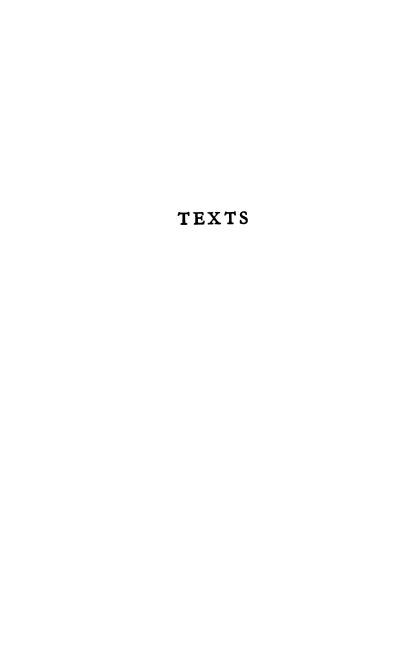

There is one form of translation which appears to have written its own epitaph: this is the attempt, first made by Walter Leaf in twenty-eight versions, and then applied with indomitable industry by John Payne to the whole Dīvān, to imitate both the monorhyme and the complicated metrical schemes of the original Persian. It is abundantly obvious now—and should have been before the experiment was ever made—that Persian rhymes and rhythms are entirely inimitable in English; and that it is doing the poet a grave disservice to use his masterly works as a laboratory for the display of perverse ingenuity. Sic pereant omnes!

INTRODUCTION

A list follows of the books from which the translations here reproduced are culled; and acknowledgments are hereby made, and grateful thanks expressed, alike to translators and publishers who first put them into print. Hāfiz has had many admiring interpreters in English, more than any other Persian poet; perhaps from his abode of everlasting bliss he will look down kindly upon the islands of the western seas, so remote from his beloved homeland, and be pleased that the two peoples who have given finer lyrics to the world than any other should in him (as in others of his tongue) find a common bond of interest and of friendship.

- 1771. William Jones, A Grammar of the Persian Language.
- 1774. John Richardson, A Specimen of Persian Poetry.
- 1785. Thomas Law in Asiatick Miscellany, vol. 1. Calcutta.
- 1786. H. H. in Asiatick Miscellany, vol. 11. Calcutta.
- 1787. John Nott, Select Odes from the Persian poet Hafez.
- 1800. John Haddon Hindley, Persian Lyrics; or, scattered poems from the Diwan-i-Hafiz.
- 1875. Hermann Bicknell, Háfig of Shíráz.
- 1877. Edward Henry Palmer, The Song of the Reed and Other Pieces.
- 1897. Gertrude Lowthian Bell, Poems from the Divan of Hafiz. (William Heinemann, Ltd.)
- 1898. Walter Leaf, Versions from Hafiz, an essay in Persian metre.
 (Alexander Moring, Ltd.)
- 1901. John Payne, The Poems of Shemseddin Mohammed Hafiz of Shiraz. (Villon Society: for private circulation only.)
- 1905. Richard Le Gallienne, Odes from the Divan of Hafix. (L. C. Page & Co., Boston, U.S.A.)
- 1921. Elizabeth Bridges (Elizabeth Daryush), Sonnets from Hafez and other Verses. (O.U.P.)
- 1923. Reuben Levy, Persian Literature, an introduction. (O.U.P.)

١ عشق آسان نمود اوّل

ألا يا أيّها السّاق أدركأساً وناولها كه عشق آسان نمود اوّل ولى افتاد مشكلها

ببوی نافهٔ کآخر صا زان طرّه بگشاید

ز تاب جعد مشکینش چه خون افتاد در دلها

مرا در منزل جانان چه امن عیش چون هر دم جرس فریاد میدارد که بربندید محملها

بمی سجّاده رنگین کن گرت پیر مغان گویـد کـه سالك بیخبر نـبـود ز راه و رسم منزلها

شب تاریك و بیم موج و گردایی چنین هایل کجا دانـنـد حـال مـا سبکـبـاران سـاحـلـهـا

همه کارم ز خودکامی ببدنامی کشید آخر نـهـان کی سـانـد آن رازی کــزو سـازنـد محفلها

حضوری گر همیخواهی ازو غایب مشو حافظ متی ما تلق من تهوی دع الدنیا وأهملها

۳ صلاح کار کجا

سملاح کار کجا و سن خراب کجا بین تفاوت رہ کے کجاست تا بکجا

دلم ز صومعه بگرفت و خرقهٔ سالوس کجاست دیر سغان و شراب ناب کجا

چه نسبتست برندی صلاح و تقوی را سماع وعظ کجا نغمهٔ رباب کجا

ز روی دوست دل دشمنان چه در يابد

چراغ سرده کجا شمع آفتاب کجا

چو کحل بینش ما خاك آستان شماست

كجا رويم بفرسا ازين جناب كجا

مبین بسیب زنخدان که چاه در راهست

کجا همی روی ایدل بدین شتاب کجا

بشد که یاد خوشش باد روزگار وصال

خود آن کرشمه کجا رفت و آن عتاب کجا

قرار و خواب ز حافظ طمع مدار ايدوست

قرار چیست صبوری کدام و خواب کجا

م بده ساق می باق

اگر آن ترك شیرازی بدست آرد دل سارا بخال هندویش بخشم سمرقند و بخارارا

بده ساق می باق که در جنّت نخواهی یافت کنار آب رکناباد و گلگشت سصلّارا

فغان کاین لولیان شوخ شیرینکار شهر آشوب چنان بردند صبر از دل که ترکان خوان یغمارا

ز عشق ناتمام ما جال یار مستغنی است

بآب و رنگ و خال و خط چه حاجت روی زیبازا

من از آن حسن روز افزون که یوسف داشت دانستم سرین در است

كه عشق از پردهٔ عصمت برون آرد زليخارا

اگر دشنام فرمائی و گر نفرین دعا گویم جواب تلخ میزیبد لب لعل شکرخارا

نصیحت گوش کن ٔ جانا که از جان دوست تر دارند

جوانان سعادتمند پند پیر دانارا

حدیث از مطرب و می گو و راز دهر کتر جو

که کس نگشود و نگشاید بحکمت این معمارا

غزل گنتی و در سفتی بیا و خوش بخوان حافظ که بر نظم تـو افشانـد فلك عـقـد ثريّارا صبا بلطف بگو آن غزال رعنارا که سر بکوه و بیابان تو دادهٔ مارا

شکر فروش که عمرش دراز باد چرا

تفقدى نكند طوطى شكرخارا

غرور حسنت اجازت مگر نداد ای کل که برسشی نکنی عندلیب شیدارا

بخلق ولطف توان كرد صيد اهل نظر

ببند و دام نگیرند سرغ دانارا

ندانم از چه سبب رنگ آشنائی نیست

سهی قدان سیه چشم ماه سیمارا

چو با حبیب نشینی و باده پیمائی

بیاد دار عبّان بادپیمارا

جز این قدر نتوان گفت در جمال تو عیب

که وضع مهر و وفا نیست روی زیبارا

در آسمان نه عجب گر بگفتهٔ حافظ

سرود زهره برقص آورد مسيحارا

رونق عهد شبابست دگر بستانرا میرسد سژدهٔ کل بلبل خوش الحانرا

ای صبا گر بجوانان چن باز رسی خدست ما برسان سرو و کل و ریحان را

گر چنین جلوه کند سغبچهٔ باده فروش

خاکروب در سیخانه کنم مژگانرا

ای که بر مه کشی از عنبر سارا چوگان مضطرب حال مگردان من سرگردان،

ترسم این قوم که بر دردکشان سیخندند در سرکار خرابات کنند ایمانرا

یار سردان خدا باش که در کشتی نوح

هست خاکی کـه بآبی نخرد طـوفـان٫را

برو از خانهٔ گردون بدر و نان سطلب کان سیه کاسه در آخر بکشد سهمان،را

هر کرا خوابگه آخر مشتی خاکست گوچه حاجت که بافلاك کشی ایوانرا

ساء کنعانی من مسند مصر آن تو شد وقت آنست که بدرود کنی زندان را

حافظا می خور و رندی کن و خوش باش ولی دام تزویر سکن چـون دگـران قـرآن.را بیا که قصر امل سخت سست بنیادست

بیار باده که بنیاد عمر بر بادست

غلام همّت آنم که زیر چرخ کبود

ز هر چه رنگ تعلّق پذیرد آزادس*ت*

چگویمت که بمیخانه دوش مست و خراب

سروش عالم غيم چه بـ ودها دادست

که ای بلند نظر شاهباز سدره نشین

نشیمن تـو نـه این کـنـج محنت آبادست

ترا ز کنگرهٔ عرش میزنند صفیر

ندانمت که در این دامگه چه افتادست

نصیحتی کنمت یادگیر و در عمل آر

که این حدیث ز پیر طریقتم یادست

غم جهان مخور و پند من مبر از یاد

که این لطیفهٔ عشقم ز رهروی یادست

رضا بداده بده وز جبین گره بگشای

که بر من و تـو در اختيار نگشادست

مجو درستی عهد از جهان مست نهاد

که این مجوز عروس هزار دامادست

نشان عهد و وفا نیست در تبسم کل

بنال بلبل بيدل كه جاى فريادست

حسد چه میبری ای سست نظم بر حافظ

قبول خاطر و لطف سفن خدادادست

۷ صراحی در دست

زلف آشفته و خوی کرده و خندان لب و مست

پیرهن چاك و غزلخوان و صراحی در دست

نرگسش عربده جوی و لبش إفسوس كنان

نم شب دوش ببالين من آمد بنشست

سر فرا گوش سن آورد باواز حزین

كفت ايعاشق ديرينه من خوابت هست

عاشقیرا که چنین بادهٔ شبگیر دهند

کافر عشق بود گر نبود باده پرست

برو ای زاهد و بر درد کشان خرده مگیر

كه ندادند جز اين تحفه بما روز الست

أنچه او ریخت به پیمانهٔ ما نوشیدیم

اگر از خمر بهشتست و گر بادهٔ مست

خندهٔ جام می و زلف گوهگیر نگار

ای بسا توبه که چون توبهٔ حافظ بشکست

۸ کل حمرا

سكفته شدكل هرا وكشت بلبل مست صلای سرخوشی ای صوفیان باده پرست اساس توبه که در محکمی چو سنگ نمود بین که جام زجاجی چه طرفهاش بشکست بیار باده که در بارگاه استغنا چه پاسبان و چه سلطان چه هوشیار و چه مست ازین رباط دو در چون ضرورتست رحیل رواق و طاق معیشت چه سر بلند و چه پست مقام عیش میسر نمیشود بی رنج بلى بحكم بلا بستهاند عهد الست بهست و نیست مرنجان ضمیر و خوش میباش که نیستیست سرانجام هر کال که شكوه آصفي و اسب باد و منطق طير بباد رفت و ازو خواجه هیچ طرف نبست بال و پر سرو از ره که تیر برتایی هوا گرفت زمانی ولی بخاك نشست زبان کلك تو حافظ چه شكر آن گوید

که گفتهٔ سخنت میبرند دست بلست

کل در بر و می بر کف و معشوق بکامست

سلطان جهانم بچنین روز غلامست گو شمع میارید درین جمع که امشب

در مجلس ما ماه رخ دوست تمامست در مذهب ما باده حلالست ولیکن

بی روی تـو ای سـرو کل انـدام حـرامـسـت گوشم همه بر قول نی و نغمهٔ چنگست

چشم همه بر لعل لب و گردش جامست در مجلس ما عطر میامیز که مارا

هر لحظه زگیسوی تو خوشبوی مشامست

از چاشنی قند مگو هیچ وز شگر

زآنرو که سرا از لب شیرین تو کامست تاگنج غمت در دل ویرانه مقیمست

همواره سرا کسوی خمرابات مقاسست از ننگ چه گوئی که مرا نام ز ننگست

وز نام چه پرسی که مرا ننگ ز نامست میخواره و سرگشته و رندیم و نظرباز

وانکس که چو ما نیست درین شهر کدامست با محتسبم عیب مگوئید که او نیز

پیوسته چو ما در طلب عیش مداست حافظ منشین بی می و معشوق زمانی کایام کل و یاسمن و عید صیاست

. ۱ صبا اگر گذری

صبا اگرگذری انتدت بکشور دوست
بیار نفحهٔ از گیسوی معنبر دوست
بجان او که بشکرانه جان برافشانم
اگر بسوی سن آری پیامی از بر دوست
وگر چنانکه دران حضرتت نباشد بار
برای دیده بیاور غباری از در دوست
من گا و تمنّای وصل او هیهات
من گا و تمنّای وصل او هیهات
مگر بخواب بینم خیال منظر دوست

ز حسرت قد و بالای چون صنوبر دوست اگرچه دوست بچیزی نمیخرد مارا بعلی نفروشیم موثی از سر دوست

چه باشد ار شود از بند نم دلش آزاد در هر تر داننا ، کند نملاد هر ماک در ...

ُ چو هست حافظ مسکین غلام و چاکر دوست

صبحدم سرغ چمن باکل نـوخاسته گفت

نازکم کن که درین باغ بسی چون تو شکفت

کل بخندید که از راست نرنجیم ولی

هيچ عاشق سخن سخت بمعشوق نگفت

گر طمع داری از آن جام مرصّع می لعل

ای بسا دُرکه بنوك مژهات باید سفت

تا ابد بوی عبت بمشامش نرسد

هر که خاك در میخانه برخساره نرفت

در گلستان ارم دوش چو از لـطف هـوا

زلف سنبل بنسيم سحرى مىآشفت

گفتم ای مسند جم جام جهان بینت کـو

گفت افسوس که آن دولت بیدار بخفت

سن عشق نه آنست که آید بزبان

ساقیا می ده و کوتاه کن این گفت و شنفت

اشك حافظ خرد و صبر بدريا انداخت

چکند سوز غم عشق نیارست نهفت

ای هدهد صبا بسبا می فرستمت بنگر که از کجا بکجا نی فرستمت

حیفست طایری چو تو در خاکدان غم زایـنـجـا بـآشـیــان وفــا میفرستمت

در راه عشق سرحلهٔ قرب و بعد نیست

مى بينمت عيان و دعا مى فرستمت

هر صبح و شام قافلهٔ از دعای خیر

در هبت شمال و صب مى فرستمت

تا لشكر غمت نكند ملك دل خراب

جان عزیز خود بنوا می فرستمت

ای غایب از نظر که شدی همنشین دل

میگویمت دعا و ثنا می فرستمت

در روی خود تفرّج صنع خدای کن

كايينة خداىنها مىفرستمت

تا سطربان زشوق منت آگهی دهند

قول و غزل بساز و نوا مى فرستمت

ساق بیا که هاتف غیم بمژده گفت

با درد صبر کن که دوا می فرستمت

حافیظ سرود مجلس سا ذکر خیر تست

بشتاب هان که اسب و قبا می فرستمت

شراب و عیش نهان چیست کار بی بنیاد

زدیم بر صف رندان و هرچه بادا باد

گره زدل بگشا وزسپهر ياد مكن

که فکر هیچ مهندس چنین گره نگشاد

ز انقلاب زمانه عجب مدارکه چرخ

ازین فسانه هزاران هزار دارد یاد

قدح بشرط ادب گیر زانکه ترکیبش

ز کاسهٔ سر جمشید و بهمنست و قباد

که آگهست که کاوس و کی کجا رفتند

که واقفست که چون رفت تخت جم بر باد

ز حسرت لب شيرين هنوز ميينم

كه لاله ميدمد از خون ديده فرهاد

سكركه لاله بدانست بيوفائي دهر

که تنا بزاد و بشد جام می زکف ننهاد

بیا بیا که زمانی زمی خراب شویم

مگر رسیم بگنجی در این خراب آباد

نمیدهند اجازت سرا بسیر سفر

نسیم باد مصلاً و آب رکناباد

قدح مگیر چو حافظ مگـر بنالهٔ چنگ

که بستهاند بر ابریش طرب دل شاد

یاد باد آن روز گاران یاد باد روز وصل دوستداران یاد باد بانک نوش شاد خواران یاد باد کام از تلخی غم چون زهر گشت گرچه یاران فارغند از یاد سن از من ایشانرا هزاران یاد باد كوشش آن حق گزاران ياد باد مبتلا گشتم درین بند و بلا زنده رود باغ کاران یاد باد گرچه صد رودست در چشم مدام راز حافظ بعد ازین ناگفته ماند ای دریغا رازداران یاد باد

یاد باد

سالها دل طلب جام جم از ما میکرد وانچه خود داشت زیبگانه تمنّا میکرد

گوهری کز صدف کون و مکان بیرونست

طلب از کم شدگان لب دریا میکرد

مشکل خویش بر پیر سغان بردم دوش

كو بتأييد نظر حلّ معمّا ميكرد

دیدمش خرم و خندان قدح باده بدست

واندران آينه صدكونه تماشا ميكرد

گفتم این جام جهان بین بسوکی داد حکیم

گفت آنروز که این گنبد مینا میکرد

بیدلی در همه احوال خدا با او بود

او نمیدیدش و از دور خدارا میکرد

این همه شعبدهٔ خویش که سیکرد اینجا

سامری پیش عصا و ید بیضا میکرد

گفت آن یار کزو گشت سر دار بلند

جرمش این بود که اسرار هویدا میکرد

فيض روح القدس ار باز مدد نرمايد

دیگران هم بکنند آنچه مسیحا میکرد

گفتمش سلسلهٔ زلف بتان از بی چیست

گفت حافظ کلهٔ از دل شیدا سیکرد

بازار بنان شکست گیرد کو محتسبی که مست گیرد تا یار مرا بشست گیرد آیا بود آنکه دست گیرد جامی زمی الست گیرد یارم چو قلح بلست گیرد هرکس که بدید چشم او گفت در بحر فتادهام چو ماهی در پاش فتادهام بزاری خرم دل آنکه همچو حافظ

۱۷ دمی با غم بسر بردن

دمی با غم بسر بردن جهان یکسر نمی ارزد

بمی بفروش دلق ما کزین بهتر نمی ارزد بکوی می فروشانش بجای بر نمیگیرند

زهی سجادهٔ تقوی که یك ساغر نمی ارزد رقیم سرزنشها کرد کر این باب رخ برتاب

چه افتاد این سر ماراکه خاك در نمیارزد شكـوه تاج سلطانیکـه بیم جان درو درجست

کلاهی دلکش است امّا بترك سر نـمـیارزد چه آسان مـیـنـمـود اوّل غم دریا ببـوی سـود

غلط کردم که این طوفان بصد گوهر نمی ارزد ترا آن به که روی خود ز مشتاقان بیونیانی

که شادی جهانگیری غم لشکر نمی ارزد چو حافظ در تناعت کوش و از دنیی دون بگذر

که یك جو منت دونان بصد سن زر نمی ارزد

غلام نرگس مست تو تاجدارانند ناریرادهٔ ایاری میداده

خراب بادهٔ لعل تو هوشیارانند

ترا صبا و سرا آب دیده شد خمّاز و گر نه عاشق و معشوق رازدارانند

ز زیر زلف دو تا چون گذر کنی بنگر

که از یمین و بسارت چه سوکوارانند

گذار کن چو صبا بر بنفشهزار و ببین کدار کن چو صبا بر بنفشهزار و ببین که از تطاول زلفت چه بیقرارانند

نصیب ماست بهشت ای خداشناس برو

كه مستحق كراست كناه كارانند

نه من بر آن کل عـارض غـزل سرايم و بس

که عندلیب تمو از هر طرف هزارانند

تو دستگیر شو ای خضر پی خجسته که من

پیاده میروم و همرهان سوارانند

بيا بميكده و چهره ارغواني كن

مرو بصومعه كانجا سياه كارانند

خلاص حافظ از آن زلف تابدار سباد

که بستگان کند تـو رستگارانند

۹۱ دوش دیدم

دوش دیدم که ملائك در میخانه زدند سند

کل آدم بسرشتند و به پیمانه زدند

ساكنان حرم ستر و عفاف ملكوت

با من راه نشين بادهٔ مستانه زدند

آسمان بار امانت نتوانست کشید

قرعهٔ کار بنام من دیوانه زدند

جنگ هفتاد و دو ملت همه را عذر بنه

چون بدیدند حقیقت ره افسانه زدند

شكر ايزد كه ميان سن و او صلح افتاد

صوفيان رقص كنان ساغر شكرانه زدند

آتش آن نیست که بر شعلهٔ آن خندد شمع

آتش آنست که در خرمن پروانه زدند

کس چو حافظ نگشاد از رخ اندیشه نقاب

تا سر زلف سنن را بقلم شانه زدند

گفتم کیم دهان و لبت کامران کنند

گفتا بچشم هر چه تو گوئی چنان کنند

كفتم خراج مصر طلب ميكند لبت

گفتا درین معاسله کتر زیان کنند

گفتم بنقطهٔ دهنت خود که برد راه

گفت این حکایتیست که با نکته دان کنند

گفتم صنم پرست مشو با صمد نشین

گفتا به کوی عشق همین و همان کنند

گفتم هوای میکده نم میبرد ز دل

گفتا خوش آن کسان که دلی شادمان کنند

گفتم شراب و خرقه نه آیین مذهبست

گفت این عمل بمذهب پیر سغان کنند

گفتم زلعل نوش لبان پیر را چه سود

گفتا ببوسهٔ شکرینش جوان کنند

گفتم کـه خـواجـه کی بـسـر حجله میرود

گفت آنزمان که مشتری و سه قران کنند

گفتم دعای دولت او ورد حافظ است

گفت این دعا ملایك هفت آسمان كنند

ساتی حدیث سرو و کل و لالـه میرود وین بحث بـا ثلاثهٔ غــــّــالـه میرود

می ده که نو عروس چمن حدّ حسن یافت کار این زمان ز صنعت دلّاله میرود

شكرشكن شوند همه طوطيان هند

زین قند پارسی که به بنگاله میرود

طیّ مکان ببین و زمان در سلوك شعر

کاین طفل یکشبه ره یکساله میرود

آن چشم جادوانهٔ عابد فریب بین

کش کاروان سحر ز دنباله میرود

إز ره مرو بعشوهٔ دنيا كه اين عجوز

مكَّاره مىنشىنىد و محتاله ميرود

باد بهار میوزد از کلستان شاه

وز ژاله باده در قدح لاله میرود

حافظ زشوق مجلس سلطان غياث دين

غافل مشوكه كار تو از ناله ميرود

کنون که در چن آمدگل از عدم بوجود

بنفشه در قدم او نهاد سر بسجود

بنوش جام صبوحی بنالهٔ دف و چنگ

ببوس غبغب ساق بنغمهٔ نی و عود

بدور کل منشین بی شراب و شاهد و چنگ

كه همچو روز بقا هفتهٔ بود معدود

شد از خروج ریاحین چو آسمان روشن

زمين باختر ميمون و طالع مسعود

ز دست شاهد نازك عذار عيسى دم

شراب نوش و رها کن حدیث عاد و ممود

جهان چو خلد برین شد بدور سوسن و کل

ولی چه سود که در وی نه ممکنست خلود

چو کل سوار شود بر هوا سلیمان وار

سحر که مرغ درآبد بنغمهٔ داود

بباغ تازه کن آیین دین زردشتی

كنون كه لاله برافروخت آتش نمرود

بخواه جام صبوحى بياد آصف عهد

وزير ملك سليمان عماد دين محمود

بود که مجلس حافظ بیمن تربیتش

هر آنچه می طلبد جمله باشدش موجود

٣٣ هزار لاله

چو آفتاب می از مشرق پیاله برآید

ز باغ عارض ساق هزار لاله برآید

نسيم در سرگل بشكند كلالهٔ سنبل

چو از سیان چن بوی آن کلاله بر آید

حكايت شب هجران نه آن حكايت حاليست

كه شمّهٔ زيانش بصد رساله برآيد

زگرد خوان نگون فلك طمع نتوان داشت

كه بي ملالت صد غصه يك نواله برآيد

بسعی خود نتوان برد پی بگوهر مقصود

خيال باشد كاين كاريي حواله برآيد

گرت چو نوح نبی صبر هست در نم طوفان

بلا بگردد و کام هزار ساله برآید

نسيم زلف تـو چون بگذرد بتربت حافظ

زخاك كالبدش صد هزار لاله برآيد

۲۶ دست از طلب ندارم

دست از طلب ندارم تا کام سن برآید یا تن رسد بجانان یا جان زتن برآید

بگشای تربتم را بعد از وفات و بنگر

كز آتش درونم دود از كفن برآيد

بنمای رخ که خلتی واله شوند و حیران

بگشای لب که فریاد از مرد و زن بر آید

جان بر لبست و حسرت در دل که از لبانش .

نگرفته هیچ کای جان از بدن برآید

از حسرت دهانش آمد بتنگ جانم

خود کام تنگدستان کی زان دهن برآید

گویند ذکر خیرش در خیل عشقبازان

هرجاکه نام حافظ در انجمن برآید

دیگر زشاخ سرو سهی بلبل صبور

گلبانگ زد که چشم بد از روی گل بدور از برشک آنکه تمثر دادشاه حسن

ای کل بشکر آنکه توئی پادشاه حسن

با بلبلان بيدل شيدا مكن غرور

از دست غیبت تو شکایت نمیکم

تا نیست غیبی نبود لدّت حضور

گر دیگران بعیش و طرب خرمند و شاد

مارا عم نگار بسود سایسهٔ سرور زاهد اگر بحور و قصورست اسیدوار

مارا شرابخانه قصورست و يار حور

می خور ببانگ چنگ و نخور غصّه ور کسی

گویـد تراکه بـاده مخورگـو هو الغفور

حافظ شکایت از غم هجران چه میکنی

در هجر وصل باشد و در ظلمتست نـور

۲۹ درد عشقی

زهر هجری چشیده ام که مپرس دلبری بر گزیده ام که مپرس میرود آب دیده ام که مپرس سخنانی شنیده ام که مپرس لب لعلی گزیده ام که مپرس رنجهائی کشیده ام که مپرس بمقای رسیده ام که مپرس

درد عشقی کشیدهام که مپرس گشتهام در جهان و آخر کار آنچنان در هوای خاك درش من بگوش خود از دهانت دوش سوی من لب چه میگزی که مگر هی تو در كابهٔ گدائی خویش همچو حافظ غریب در ره عشق

۲۷ خوشا شیراز

خداوندا نگددار از زوالش که عمر خضر می بخشد زلالش عبیر آمیز می آید شمالش بجوی از مردم صاحب کالش که شیربنان ندادند انفعالش چه داری آگهی چونست حالش دلا چون شیر مادر کن حلالش که دارم خلوتی خوش با خیالش نکردی شکر ایام وصالش

خوشا شیراز و وضع بی مثالش زرکناباد ما صد لوحش الله میان جمعفرآباد و مصلی بشیراز آی و فیض روح قلسی که نام فند مصری برد آنجا صبا زان لولی شنگول سرمست گر آن شیرین پسر خونم بریزد مکن از خواب بیدارم خدارا چرا حافظ چو می ترسیدی از هجر

۲۸ می بنوش

گفت ببخشند گنه می بنوش میردهٔ رحمت برساند سروش تما می لعل آوردش خون بجوش هر قدر ای دل که توانی بکوش نکتهٔ سربسته چه گوئی خموش روی من و خاك در سیفروش با كرم پادشه عیب پوش روح قدس حلقهٔ امرش بگوش و خطر چم بدش دار گوش

هاتنی از گوشهٔ میخانه دوش لطف الهی بکندکار خویش این خرد خام بمیخانه بر گرچه وصالش نه بکوشش دهند لطف خدا بیشتر از جرم ماست گوش من و حلقهٔ گیسوی یار رندی حافظ نه گناهیست صعب داور دین شاه شجاع آنکه کرد ای ملك العرش مرادش بده

۲۹ چو کل غنیمت دان

سعر ببوی گلستان دمی شدم در باغ که تا چو بلبل بیدل کنم علاج دماغ

بجلوهٔ کل سوری نگاه سیکردم که بود در شب تیره بروشنی چو چراغ

جنان بحسن و جرانی خویشتن سغرور که داشت از دل بلبل هزار گونه فراغ

گشاده نرگس رعنا زحسرت آب از چشم نهاده لاله زسودا بجان و دل صد داغ

زبان کشیده چو تیغی بسرزنش سوسن دهان گشاده شقایق چو سردم ایغاغ

یکی چـو بـاده پرستان صـراحـی انـدر دست یکی چـو ساقی مستان بکف گرفته ایاغ نشاط و عیش و جوانی چوگل غنیمت دان

كه حافظا نبود بر رسول غير بــلاغ

هزار دشم ارسيكنند قصد هلاك

گرم تو دوستی از دشمنان ندارم باك

سرا اسید وصال تو زنده سیدارد

و گر نه هر دم از هجر تست بم هلاك

نفس نفس اگر از باد نشنوم بویش

زسان زمان چو گل از غم کنم گریبان چاك

رود بخواب دو چشم از خیال تو هیهات

بود صبور عل اندر فراق تو حاشاك

اگر تو زخم زنی به که دیگری مرهم

وگر تـوٰ زهر دهی به که دیگری تریاك

بضرب سيفك قتل حياتنا ابدا

لأنّ روحى قد طاب أن يكون فداك

عنان مپیچ که گر میزنی بشمشیرم

سپر کم سر و دستت ندارم از فتراك

ترا چنانکه توئی هر نظر کجا بیند

بقدر دانش خود هر کسی کند ادراك

بچشم خلق عزيز جهان شود حافظ

که بر در تو نهد روی مسکنت بر خاك

عشقبازی و جوانی و شراب لعل فام مجلس انس و حریف همدم و شرب مدام

ساتی شکّردهان و مطرب شیرین سخن همنشینی نیک کردار و ندیمی نیکنام

شاهدی از لطف و پاکی رشك آب زندگی دلبری در حسن و خوبی غیرت ساه تمام

بزمگاهی دلنشان چون قصر فردوس برین

گشنی پیرامنش چون روضهٔ دار السلام

صف نشبنان نیکخواه و پیشکاران با ادب دریفان دوستکام دوستکام

بادهٔ گلرنگ تلخ تیز خوشخوار سبك

تُقلش از لعل نگار و نقلش از یاقوت خام

غمزهٔ ساق بسیف ای خدد آهنه تسیغ زلف جانان از برای صید دل گسترده دام

نکته دانی بذله گو چون حافظ شیرین سخن

بخشش آموزی جهان افروز چون حاجی قوام

هر که این عشرت نخواهد خوشدلی بر وی تباه وانکه این مجلس نجوید زندگی بر وی حرام

مـژدهٔ وصل تــو کــو کـز سر جان بر خیزم طایر قدسم و از دام جــهـان برخیزم

بولای تـوکـه گر بندهٔ خویشم خوانی

از سر خواجگی کون و مکان برخیزم

یا رب از ابر هدایت برسان بارانی

پیشتر زانکه چوگردی ز میان برخیزم

بر سر تربت سن با می و سطرب بنشین

تا ببویت زلحد رقص کنان برخیزم

خیز و بالا بنما ای بت شیرین حرکات

کز سر جان و جهان دست فشان بر خیزم

گر چه بیرم تو شبی تنگ در آغوشم کش

تا سرگه ز کنار تو جوان برخیرم

روز مرگم نفسی مهلت دیدار بده

تا چو حافظ ز سر جان و جمهان بر خیزم

۳۳ نور خدا

در خرابات سغان نـور خـدا میدنم این عجب بین که چو نوری ز کجا می پینم

جلوه بر من مفروش ای ملك الحاج كه تو

خانه مىينى و سن خانه خدا مىيىم

خواهم از زلـف بتان نافه گشائی کـردن

فکر دورست همانا که خطا می بینم

سوز دل اشك روان آه سحر نالهٔ شب

این همه از نظر لطف شما میینم

هر دم از روی تو نقشی زندم راه خیال

باکه گویم که درین پرده چها می بینم

کس نـدیـدسـت ز مشك ختن و نافهٔ چین

آنچه من هرسحر از باد صبا مىينم

دوستان عیب نظربازی حافظ مکنید

که سن اورا ز عبّان شما میینم

بگذار تا زشارع سیخانه بگذریم

كز بنهر جرعة همه محتاج اين دريم

روز نخست چون دم رندی زدیم و عشق

شرط آن بود که جنز ره آن شیوه نسپریم

جائی که تخت و مسند جم میرود بباد

گر غم خوریم خوش نبود به که می خوریم

تا بوکه دست در کر او توان زدن

در خون دل نشسته چو ياقوت اهريم

واعظ مكن نصيحت شوريدگان كه ما

با خاك كوى دوست بفردوس ننگريم

چون صوفیان بحالت و رقصند مقتدا

ما نیز هم بشعبده دستی برآوریم

از جرعهٔ تو خاك زمين درٌ و لعل يافت

بیچاره ماکه پیش تو از خاك كتريم

حافظ چو ره بکنگرهٔ کاخ وصل نیست

با خاك آستانهٔ این در بسر بریم،

ه ۳ وقت کل

دوستان وقت گل آن بـه کـه بعشرت کوشیم سخن اهـل دلـسـت این و بجان بنیوشیم

نیست در کس کرم و وقت طرب میگذرد

چاره آنست که سجّاده بمی بفروشیم

خوش هوائيست فرح بخش خدايا بفرست

نازنینی کیم برویش می گلگون نوشیم

ارغنون ساز فلك رهزن اهل هنرست

چـون ازین غـصّـه ننالیم و چـرا مخروشیم

کل بجوش آسد و از می نزدیمش آبی لاجرم زاتش حرسان و هوس میجوشیم

میکشیم از قدح لاله ^شرابی سوهوم چشم بد دورکه بی مطرب و می مدهوشیم

حافظ این حال عجب با که توان گفت که ما بلبلانیم که در موسم کل خاموشیم شاه شمشاد قدان خسرو شیرین دهنان

كه بمژكان شكند قلب همه صف شكنان

مست بگذشت و نظر بر من درویش انداخت

گفت ای چشم و چراغ همه شیرین سخنان

تا کی از سیم و زرت کیسه تــهــی خواهد بود

بندهٔ من شو و بر خور زهمه سيم تنان

کتر از ذرّه نهٔ پست مشو سهر بورز

تا بخلوتگه خورشید رسی چرخ زنان

بر جهان تکیه مکن ور قدحی می داری

شادی زهره جبینان خور و نازك بدنان

ىبر پيمانه كش من كه روانش خوش باد

گفت پرهیز کن از محبت پیمان شکنان

دأسن دوست بدست آر و ز دشمن بكسل

مرد یزدان شو و قارغ گذر از اهرسنان

با صبا در چمن لاله سر میگنتم

که شهیدان که اند این همه خونین کفنان

كفت حافظ من و تو محرم اين راز نه ايم

از می لعل حکایت کن و شیرین دهنان

۳۷ دولت دیدار

دانی که چیست دولت دبدار یار دیدن

در کری او گدائی بر خسروی گزیدن

از جان طمع بریدن آسان بود ولیکن

از دوستان جانی مشکل توان بریدن

خواهم شدن ببستان چون غنچه با دل تنگ

وانجا به نیك نای پیراهنی دریدن

که چون نسیم با کل راز نهفته گفتن

که سر عشقبازی از بلبلان شنیدن

بوسیدن لب یار اول زدست مگذار

کاخر ملول گردی از دست و لب گزیدن

فرصت شمار هجبت كـز اين دو راهه منزل

چون بگذریم دیگر نشوان بهم رسیدن

گوئی برنت حانظ از یاد شاه یحیی

یا رب بیادش آور درویش پروریدن

۳۸ بادهپرستی

صبحست ساقیا قدمی بر شراب کن

دور نك درنگ ندارد شتاب كن

زان پیشتر که عالم فانی شود خراب

مارا زجام بادهٔ گلگون خراب كن

خورشید می ز مشرق ساغر طلوع کرد

گر برگ عیش میطلبی ترك خواب كن

روزی که چرخ از کل ما کوزها کند

زنهار کاسهٔ سر ما پر شراب کن

ما مرد زهد و توبه و طامات نیستیم

با سا بجام بادهٔ صافی خطاب کن

كار صواب باده پرستيست حافـظ

برخير و عـزم جـزم بكار صـواب كـن

سزرع سبز فلك ديدم و داس سه نو يادم از كشتهٔ خويش آمد و هنگام درو

گفتم ای بخت بخفتیدی و خورنسید دسید

گفت با این همه از سابقه نومید مشو

از چراغ تو بخورشید رسد صد پرتو

تكيه بر اختر شب دزد مكن كاين عيّار

تاج کاووس ببرد و کر کیخسرو

گوشوار زر و لعل ارچه گران دارد گوش

دور خوبی گذرانست نصیحت بشنو

چشم بد دور ز خال تو که در عرصهٔ حسن

بیدق راند که برد از مه و خورشید گرو

آسمان کو مفروش این عظمت کاندر عشق

خرمن مه بجوی خوشهٔ پروین بدو جو

آتش زهد و ریا خرمن دین خواهد سوخت

حافظ این خرقهٔ پشمینه بینداز و برو

كارم بكاست الحمد الله كه جام زركش گه لعل دلخواه پيران جاهل شيخان گمراه وز فعل عابد استغفر الله چشمى و صدنم جانى و صد آه از قاست سرو از عارضت ماه درس شبانه ورد سحرگاه

عیشم مدامست از لعل دلخواه ای بخت سرکش تنگش ببرکش مارا برندی افسانه کردند از دست زاهد کردیم توبه جانا چه گویم شرح فراقت کافر مبیناد این غم که دیلست خوق لبت برد از یاد حافظ

٤٦ وجود ما معمائيست

سورگاهان که غمور شبانه نهادم عقل را ره توشه از می نگار می فروشم عشوهٔ داد زساتی کان ابرو شنیدم برو این دام بر سرغی دگر نه بدد طرف وصل از حسن شاهی ندیم و سطرب و ساق همه اوست بده کشتی می تا خوش برانیم وجود ما معتائیست حافظ

گرنتم باده با جنگ و چغانه زشهر هستیش کردم روانه که ایمن گشتم از مکر زمانه اگر خودرا بینی در میانه که عنقارا بلندست آشیانه که با خود عشق بازد جاودانه خیال آب و گل در ره بهانه ازین دربای ناپیدا کرانه که تحقیش فسونست و فسانه

که حقّ محبت دیرینه داری از آن گوهرکه درگنجینه داری توکز خورشید و مه آیینه داری که با حکم خدائی کینه داری تو دانی خرقهٔ پشمینه داری خدارا گر می دوشینه داری بقرآنی که اندر سینه داری

بیا با ما مورز این کینه داری نصیحت گوش کن کاین دُر بسی به ولیکن کی نمائی رخ برندان بد رندان مگو ای شیخ و هش دار نمی ترسی ز آه آتشینم بفریاد خار مفلسان رس ندیدم خوشتر از شعر تو حافظ

۴۶ بخویش مغرور

ای که دایم بخویش مغروری گرد دیوانگان عشق مگرد مستی عشق نیست در سر تو روی زردست و آه درد آلود بگذر از نام و ننگ خود حافظ

گر ترا عشق نیست معذوری که بعقل عقیله مشهوری رو که تو مست آب انگوری عاشقانرا دوای رنجوری ساغر می طلب که مخموری

٤٤ کل و بلبل

رفتم بباغ صبحدی تا چنم کلی آمد بگوش ناگهم آواز بللی

مسکین چـو مـن بعشق گلی گشته مبتلا

واندر چن فكنده ز فرياد غلغلى

میگشتم اندر آن چن و باغ دسبدم میکردم اندر آن کل و بابل تأمّلی

کل یـار حسن گشته و بلبل قرین عشق

آنرا تفضّلی نه و اینرا تبدّلی

چون کرد در دلم اثر آواز عندلیب

كشتم چنانكه هيچ نماندم تملى

بس كل شكفته مىشود اين باغ را ولى

کس بی بلای خار نچیدست ازو گلی

دارد هزار عیب و ندارد تفضّلی

نسیم صبح سعادت بدان نشان که تو دانی

گذر بکوی فلان کن در آن زمان که تو دانی

تو بیك خلوت رازی و دیده بر سر راهت

بمردمی نه بفرسان چنان بران که تو دانی

بگوکه جان عزیزم زدست رفت خدارا

ز لعل روح فزایش ببخش آن که تـو دانی

من این حروف نوشتم چنانکه غیر ندانست

تو هم ز روی کرامت چنان بخوان که تو دانی

خیال تیغ تـو بـا ما حدیث تشنه و آبست

اسیر خویش گرفتی بکش چنان که تو دانی

امید در کر زرکشت چگونه ببندم

دتیقهایست نگارا در آن میان که تو دانی

بكيست تركى و تازى درين معامله حافظ

حدیث عشق بیان کن بدان زبان که تو دانی

۶۹ ساقینامه

کراست فزاید کال آورد وز این هر دو بیحاصل افتادهام زند لاف بینائی اندر عدم چوجم آگه از سر عالم تمام بیا ساق آن می که حال آورد به من ده که بس بیدل افتادهام بیا ساق آن می کز او جام جم به من ده که گردم به تأیید جام که با گنج قارون دهد عمر نوح در کاسرانی و عصر دراز به کیخسرو و جم فرستد سلام که جشید کی بود و کاورس کی صلائی به شاهان بیشینه زن که گم شد در او لشکر سلم و تور که دیدهاست ایوان افراسیاب که گم شده آن ترك خنجر کشش

که اندر خرابات دارد نشست خراب می و جام خواهم شدن که گر شیر نوشد شود بیشه سوز بیم مرشت عبیر ملایك در آن می سرشت دماغ خرد تا ابد خوش کم بر آرم به عشرت سر از این مغال در اینجا چرا تختهبند تم خرایم کن و گنج حکمت بین خرایم کن و گنج حکمت بین در خسروی در گدائی زنم در خرخش دهد رود زهره درود

بیا ساق آن کیمیای فتوح
بده تا به رویت گشایند باز
بیا ساق آن ی که عکسش زجام
بده تا بگویم به آواز نی
دم از سیر این دیر دیرینه زن
همان مرحله است این بیابان دور
همان منزل است این جهان خراب
کا رفت پیران لشگر کشش

بیا ساقی آن بکر مستور مست به من ده که بدنام خواعم شدن بیا ساقی آن آب اندبشه سوز بیا ساق آن می که حور بهشت بیا ساقی آن می که حور بهشت بیا ساق آن می که شاهی دهد به من ده مگر گردم از عیب پاك چو شد باغ روحانان مسکم شرایم ده و روی دولت بین من آنم که چون جام گیرم به دست بین من آنم که چون جام گیرم به دست بی دم از پارسائی زنم که حافظ چو مستانه سازد سرود

مرا با توست بسیار آشنائی دو راه است و کین از پیش و از پس سراد هم بجوئیم ار توانیم چراگهی ندارد ایمن و خوش

رفیق بیکسان، یار غریبان زیمن همتش این ره سرآید

مسلمانان، مسلمانان، خدارا! که گوئی خود نبودهاست آشنائی برادر کی چنین کرد؟ که این تنها بدان تنها رساند

که فالم لا تذرنی فرداً آسد به لطفش گفت رند رهنشینی بیا دامی بنه گر دانه داری » ولی سیمرغ سیباید شکارم » که از ما بینشان است آشیانش که خورشید غنی شد کیسه پرداز!»

ز بال سرو سیکن دیده بانی نم اشکی و با خود گفتگوئی سوافق گرد با ابر بهاران مدد بخشش ز آب دیدهٔ خویش

الا ای آهوی وحشی، کجائی؟ دو تنهارو، دو سرگردان بیکس بیا تا حال یک دیگر بدانیم که این دشت مشوش

که خواهد شد، بگوئید، ای حبیبان مگر خضر سبارك پس در آیـد

نکرد آن همدم دیرین مدارا چنین بیرحم زد زخم جدائی برفت و طبع خوشباشم حزین کرد مگر خضر مبارك پى تواند

مگر وقت عطا پروردن آمد که روزی رهروی در سرزمینی که «ای سالك، چه در انبانه داری؟ جوابش داد و گفتا «دانه دارم بگفتا «چون به دست آری نشانش؟ نیاز ما چه وزن آرد بدین ساز؟

چو آن سرو سهی شد کاروانی لب سر چشمه ئی و طرف جوئی به یاد رفتگان و دوستداران چو نالان آیدت آب روان پیش ولی غافل مباش از دهر بدمست جو معلوم است شرح، از بر بخوانید که حکم انداز هجران در کین است مده جام می و پای کل از دست رفیقان، قدر یکدیگر بدانید مقالات نصیحتگو همین است

تـو از نـون والقلم ميپرس تفسير وازآن، تخمى كه حاصل بود، كشتم كه مغز شعر نغزش جان اجزاست مشام جان معطر ساز جاويد نه زآن آهوكه ازمردم نفوراست!

چو ساهی کلک آرم به تقریر روان را با خرد درم سرشم فرحبخشی در این ترکیب پیداست بیا وز نکهت این طیب اسید که این نافه زچین جیب حور است

۶۸ فتنهٔ روزگار

سر فتنه دارد دگر روزگار همیدارم از دورگردون شگفت و گر پیر سغ آتشمی میزند فریب جهان قصهٔ روشن است در این خونفشان عرصهٔ رستخیز

من و مستی و فتنهٔ چشم یار ندانم که را خاك خواهد گرفت ندانم چراغ که برمیكند حمر تا چه زاید شب آبستن است تو خون صراحی به ساغر بریز

۹۶ بشنوید ای ساکنان

بر سر بازار جانبازان منادی میزنید بشنوید ای ساکنان کوی رندی بشنوید دختر رز چند روزی شد که از ما گم شدست رفت تا گیرد سر خود هان و هان حاضر شوید جامهٔ دارد زلعل و نیم تاجی از حباب عقل و دانش برد و شد تا ایمن از وی نغنوید هر که آن تلخم دهد حلوا بها جانش دهم ور بود بوشیده و بنهان بدوزخ در روید دختری شبگرد تند تلخ گرنگست و مست

. ه اسمعبل

گر بیابیدش بسوی خانهٔ حافظ برید

مجد دین سرور و سلطان قضات اسمعیل
که زدی کلک زبان آورش از شرع نطق
ناف هنته بد و از ماه رجب کاف و الف
که برون رفت ازین خانهٔ بی نظم و نسق
کدف رهت حق منزل او دان وانگه
سال تاریخ وفاتش طلب از رهت حق

TRANSLATIONS

I LOVE'S AWAKENING

T

Ho, saki, haste, the beaker bring, Fill up, and pass it round the ring; Love seemed at first an easy thing— But ah! the hard awakening.

2

So sweet perfume the morning air Did lately from her tresses bear, Her twisted, musk-diffusing hair— What heart's calamity was there!

Within life's caravanserai
What brief security have I,
When momently the bell doth cry,
"Bind on your loads; the hour is nigh!"

3

Let wine upon the prayer-mat flow, An if the taverner bids so; Whose wont is on this road to go Its ways and manners well doth know.

4

Mark now the mad career of me, From wilfulness to infamy; Yet how conceal that mystery Whereof men make festivity? A mountain sea, moon clouded o'er, And nigh the whirlpool's awful roar— How can they know our labour sore Who pass light-burthened on the shore?

5

Hafiz, if thou wouldst win her grace, Be never absent from thy place; When thou dost see the well-loved face, Be lost at last to time and space.

A. J. A.

2 WHERE IS THE PIOUS DOER?

Where is the pious doer? and I the estray'd one, where? Behold how far the distance, from his safe home to here!

Dark is the stony desert, trackless and vast and dim, Where is hope's guiding lantern? Where is faith's star so fair?

My heart fled from the cloister, and chant of monkish hymn, What can avail me sainthood, fasting and punctual prayer?

What is the truth shall light me to heaven's strait thoroughfare? Whither, O heart, thou hastest? Arrest thee, and beware!

See what a lone adventure is thine unending quest!

Fraught with what deadly danger! Set with what unseen snare!

Say not, O friend, to Hafez, "Quiet thee now and rest!"
Calm and content, what are they? Patience and peace, O where?
ELIZABETH BRIDGES (ELIZABETH DARYUSH)

3 SWEET MAID

Sweet maid, if thou would'st charm my sight, And bid these arms thy neck infold; That rosy cheek, that lily hand, Would give thy poet more delight Than all Bocara's vaunted gold, Than all the gems of Samarcand.

Boy, let yon liquid ruby flow, And bid thy pensive heart be glad, Whate'er the frowning zealots say: Tell them, their Eden cannot show A stream so clear as Rocnabad, A bower so sweet as Mosellay.

OI when these fair perfidious maids, Whose eyes our secret haunts infest, Their dear destructive charms display; Each glance my tender breast invades, And robs my wounded soul of rest, As Tartars seize their destin'd prey.

In vain with love our bosoms glow: Can all our tears, can all our sighs, New lustre to those charms impart? Can cheeks, where living roses blow, Where nature spreads her richest dyes, Require the borrow'd gloss of art?

Speak not of fate: ah! change the theme, And talk of odours, talk of wine, Talk of the flowers that round us bloom: 'Tis all a cloud, 'tis all a dream; To love and joy thy thoughts confine, Nor hope to pierce the sacred gloom. Beauty has such resistless power,
Than even the chaste Egyptian dame
Sigh'd for the blooming Hebrew boy:
For her how fatal was the hour,
When to the banks of Nilus came
A youth so lovely and so coy!

But ah! sweet maid, my counsel hear (Youth should attend when those advise Whom long experience renders sage): While music charms the ravish'd ear; While sparkling cups delight our eyes, Be gay; and scorn the frowns of age.

What cruel answer have I heard! And yet, by heaven, I love thee still: Can aught be cruel from thy lip? Yet say, how fell that bitter word From lips which streams of sweetness fill, Which nought but drops of honey sip?

Go boldly forth, my simple lay, Whose accents flow with artless ease, Like orient pearls at random strung: Thy notes are sweet, the damsels say; But O! far sweeter, if they please The nymph for whom these notes are sung.

SIR WILLIAM JONES

4 FRIENDLY ZEPHYR

Go, friendly Zephyrl whisp'ring greet Yon gentle fawn with slender feet; Say that in quest of her I rove The dangerous steeps, the wilds of love. Thou merchant who dost sweetness vend (Long may kind heav'n thy life defend!)
Ah, why unfriendly thus forget
Thy am'rous sweet-billed parroquet?

Is it, O rose! thy beauty's pride That casts affection far aside, Forbidding thee to court the tale Of thy fond mate, the nightingale?

I know not why 'tis rare to see The colour of sincerity In nymphs who boast majestic grace, Dark eyes, and silver-beaming face.

What tho' that face be angel fair,
One fault does all its beauty marr;
Nor faith, nor constancy adorn
Thy charms, which else might shame the morn.

By gentle manners we control The wise, the sense-illumin'd soul: No idle lure, no glitt'ring bait Th' experienc'd bird will captivate.

What wonder, Hafez, that thy strain, Whose sounds inchant th' etherial plain, Should tempt each graver star to move In dances with the star of love?

J. NOTT

5 SPRING SONG

With sullen pace stern winter leaves the plain,
And blooming spring trips gaily o'er the meads,
Sweet Philomel now swells her plaintive strain,
And her lov'd rose his blushing beauties spreads.

- O Zephyr, whilst you waft your gentle gale, Fraught with the fragrance of Arabia's groves, Breathe my soft wishes through yon blooming vale, Tell charming Leila how her poet loves!
- O! for one heavenly glance from that dear maid, How would my raptur'd heart with joy rebound; Down to her feet I'd lowly bend my head, And with my eyebrows sweep the hallow'd ground.
- Could those stern fools who steal religion's mask,
 And rail against the sweet delights of love,
 Fair Leila see, no paradise they'd ask,
 But for her smiles renounce the joys above.
- Trust not in fortune, vain deluded charm!
 Whom wise men shun, and only fools adore.
 Oft, whilst she smiles, Fate sounds the dread alarm,
 Round flies her wheel; you sink to rise no more.
- Ye rich and great, why rear those princely domes?

 Those heaven-aspiring towers why proudly raise?

 Lo! whilst triumphant all around you blooms,

 Death's aweful angel numbers out your days.
- Sweet tyrant, longer in that flinty breast
 Lock not thy heart, my bosom is its throne;
 There let the charming flutt'rer gently rest;
 Here feast on joys to vulgar souls unknown.
- But ah! what means that fiercely-rolling eye,
 Those pointed locks which scent the ambient air;
 Now my fond hopes in wild disorder fly,
 Low droops my love, a prey to black despair.
- Those charming brows, arch'd like the heavenly bow, Arm not, O gentle maid, with such disdain; Drive not a wretch, already sunk full low, Hopeless to mourn his never-ceasing pain.

But to the fair no longer be a slave;
Drink, Hafez! revel, all your cares unbend,
And boldly scorn the mean dissembling knave
Who makes religion every vice defend!

J. RICHARDSON

6 THE HOUSE OF HOPE

The house of hope is built on sand, And life's foundations rest on air; Then come, give wine into my hand, That we may make an end of care.

Let me be slave to that man's will Who 'neath high heaven's turquoise bowl Hath won and winneth freedom still From all entanglement of soul;

Save that the mind entangled be With her whose radiant loveliness Provoking love and loyalty Relieves the mind of all distress.

Last night as toping I had been In tavern, shall I tell to thee What message from the world unseen A heavenly angel brought to me?

"Falcon of sovereign renown, High-nesting bird of lofty gaze, This corner of affliction town Befits thee ill, to pass thy days.

"Hearest thou not the whistle's call From heaven's rampart shrills for thee? What chanced I cannot guess at all This snare should now thy prison be." Heed now the counsel that I give, And be it to thy acts applied; For these are words I did receive From him that was my ancient guide.

"Be pleased with what the fates bestow, Nor let thy brow be furrowed thus; The gate to freedom here below Stands not ajar to such as us."

Look not to find fidelity
Within a world so weakly stayed;
This ancient crone, ere flouting thee,
A thousand bridegrooms had betrayed.

Take not for sign of true intent Nor think the rose's smile sincere; Sweet, loving nightingale, lament: There is much cause for weeping here.

What envying of Hafiz' ease, Poor poetaster, dost thou moan? To make sweet music, and to please, That is a gift of God alone.

A. J. A.

7 WILD OF MIEN

Wild of mien, chanting a love-song, cup in hand, locks disarrayed, Cheek beflushed, wine-overcome, vesture awry, breast displayed. With a challenge in that eye's glance, with a love-charm on the lip, Came my love, sat by my bedside in the dim midnight shade:

O'er my ear bending, my love spake in a sad voice and a low, "Is it thus, spite of the old years, lover mine, slumber-bewrayed?"

To the wise comes there a cup, fired of the night, pressed to the lip; An he bow not to the Wine Creed, be he writ Love's renegade.

Go thy way, saint of the cell, flout not the dreg-drainer again; In the first hour of the world's birth was the high hest on us laid.

Whatsoe'er potion His hand pours in the bowl, that will we quaff, Heady ferment of the Soul-world, or the grape-must unallayed. Ah, how oft, e'en as with HAFIZ, hath the red smile of the vine And the curled ringlet on Love's cheek a repentance unmade!

WALTER LEAF

8 RED ROSE

The rose has flushed red, the bud has burst, And drunk with joy is the nightingale-Hail, Sufis! lovers of wine, all hail! For wine is proclaimed to a world athirst. Like a rock your repentance seemed to you; Behold the marvell of what avail Was your rock, for a goblet has cleft it in two! Bring wine for the king and the slave at the gate Alike for all is the banquet spread, And drunk and sober are warmed and fed. When the feast is done and the night grows late, And the second door of the tavern gapes wide, The low and the mighty must bow the head 'Neath the archway of Life, to meet what...outside? Except thy road through affliction pass, None may reach the halting-station of mirth; God's treaty: Am I not Lord of the earth? Man sealed with a sigh: Ah yes, alas! Nor with Is nor Is Not let thy mind contend; Rest assured all perfection of mortal birth In the great Is Not at the last shall end. For Assaf's pomp, and the steeds of the wind, And the speech of birds, down the wind have fled, And he that was lord of them all is dead: Of his mastery nothing remains behind. Shoot not thy feathered arrow astray! A bow-shot's length through the air it has sped, And then...dropped down in the dusty way.

But to thee, oh Hafiz, to thee, oh Tongue
That speaks through the mouth of the slender reed.
What thanks to thee when thy verses speed
From lip to lip, and the song thou hast sung?

GERTRUDE BELL

MY BOSOM GRAC'D

My bosom grac'd with each gay flow'r, I grasp the bowl, my nymph in glee; The monarch of the world this hour, Is but a slave compar'd to me.

Intrude not with the taper's light,
My social friends, with beaming eyes;
Trundle around a starry night,
And lo! my nymph the moon supplies.

Away, thy sprinkling odours spare, Be not officiously thus kind; The waving ringlets of my Fair, Shed perfume to the fainting wind.

My ears th' enlivening notes inspire,
As lute or harp alternate sound;
My eyes those ruby lips admire,
Or catch the glasses sparkling round.

Then let no moments steal away,
Without thy mistress and thy wine;
The spring flowers blossom to decay,
And youth but glows to own decline.

THOMAS LAW

10 ZEPHYR

Zephyr, should'st thou chance to rove By the mansion of my love, From her locks ambrosial bring Choicest odours on thy wing.

Could'st thou waft me from her breast Tender sighs to say I'm blest, As she lives! my soul would be Sprinkl'd o'er with ecstasy.

But if Heav'n the boon deny, Round her stately footsteps fly, With the dust that thence may rise, Stop the tears which bathe these eyes.

Lost, poor mendicant! I roam Begging, craving she would come: Where shall I thy phantom see, Where, dear nymph, a glimpse of thee?

Like the wind-tost reed my breast Fann'd with hope is ne'er at rest, Throbbing, longing to excess Her fair figure to caress.

Yes, my charmer, tho' I see Thy heart courts no love with me, Not for worlds, could they be mine, Would I give a hair of thine.

Why, O care! shall I in vain Strive to shun thy galling chain, When these strains still fail to save, And make Hafiz more a slave.

J. H. HINDLEY

11 DAWN

Thus spoke at dawn the field-bird to the newly wakened rose: "Be kind, for many a bloom like you in this meadow grows." The rose laughed: "You will find that we at truth show no distress.

But never did a lover with harsh words his love so press. If ruby wine from jewelled cup it is your wish to drink, Then pearls and corals pierced with eyelash you must strive to link. Love's savour to his nostrils to entice he ne'er can seek. Who on the tavern's earthy floor has not swept dusty cheek."

In Iram's garden yesternight, when, in the grateful air, The breeze of coming day stirred the tress of hyacinth fair, I asked: "Throne of Jamshid, where is thy world-revealing cup?" It sighed: "That waking fortune deep in sleep lies muffled up." They are not always words of love that from the tongue descend: Come, bring me wine, O taverner, and to this talk put end. His wit and patience to the waves are cast by Hafiz' tears. What can he do, that may not hide how love his being sears?

R. LEVY

12 LAPWING

Wind from the east, oh Lapwing of the day, I send thee to my Lady, though the way Is far to Saba, where I bid thee fly: Lest in the dust thy tameless wings should lie, Broken with grief, I send thee to thy nest, Fidelity.

Or far or near there is no halting-place Upon Love's road—absent, I see thy face, And in thine ear my wind-blown greetings sound, North winds and east waft them where they are bound, Each morn and eve convoys of greeting fair

I send to thee.

Unto mine eyes a stranger, thou that art
A comrade ever-present to my heart,
What whispered prayers and what full meed of praise
I send to thee.

Lest Sorrow's army waste thy heart's domain,
I send my life to bring thee peace again,
Dear life thy ransom! From thy singers learn
How one that longs for thee may weep and burn;
Sonnets and broken words, sweet notes and songs
I send to thee.

Give me the cup! a voice rings in mine ears Crying: "Bear patiently the bitter years! For all thine ills, I send thee heavenly grace. God the Creator mirrored in thy face Thine eyes shall see, God's image in the glass I send to thee.

"Hafiz, thy praise alone my comrades sing; Hasten to us, thou that art sorrowing! A robe of honour and a harnessed steed I send to thee."

GERTRUDE BELL

13 SECRET DRAUGHT

The secret draught of wine and love repressed Are joys foundationless—then come whate'er May come, slave to the grape I stand confessed! Unloose, oh friend, the knot of thy heart's care, Despite the warning that the Heavens reveal! For all his thought, never astronomer That loosed the knot of Fate those Heavens conceal!

Not all the changes that thy days unfold Shall rouse thy wonder; Time's revolving sphere Over a thousand lives like thine has rolled. That cup within thy fingers, dost not hear The voices of dead kings speak through the clay Kobad, Bahman, Djemshid, their dust is here, "Gently upon me set thy lips!" they say.

What man can tell where Kaus and Kai have gone? Who knows where even now the restless wind Scatters the dust of Djem's imperial throne? And where the tulip, following close behind The feet of Spring, her scarlet chalice rears, There Ferhad for the love of Shirin pined, Dyeing the desert red with his heart's tears.

Bring, bring the cup! drink we while yet we may To our soul's ruin the forbidden draught; Perhaps a treasure-trove is hid away Among those ruins where the wine has laughed!—Perhaps the tulip knows the fickleness Of Fortune's smile, for on her stalk's green shaft She bears a wine-cup through the wilderness.

The murmuring stream of Ruknabad, the breeze That blows from out Mosalla's fair pleasaunce, Summon me back when I would seek heart's ease, Travelling afar; what though Love's countenance Be turned full harsh and sorrowful on me, I care not so that Time's unfriendly glance Still from my Lady's beauty turned be.

Like Hafiz, drain the goblet cheerfully While minstrels touch the lute and sweetly sing, For all that makes thy heart rejoice in thee Hangs of Life's single, slender, silken string.

GERTRUDE BELL

14 RECALL

That day of friendship when we met—Recall; Recall those days of fond regret,

Recall.

As bitter poison grief my palate sours:
The sound: "Be it sweet!" at feasts of ours
Recall.

My friends, it may be, have forgotten long; But I a thousand times that throng

Recall:

And now while fettered by misfortune's chain, All those who grateful sought my gain

Recall.

Though thousand rivers from my eyes descend, I Zindarud, where gard'ners tend,

Recall;

And crushed by sorrow that finds no relief, Those who brought solace to my grief

Recall.

No more from ḤÁFIZ' lips shall secrets pass: Those who once kept them, I, alas!

Recall.

H. BICKNELL

15 A MAD HEART

I

Long years my heart had made request Of me, a stranger, hopefully (Not knowing that itself possessed The treasure that it sought of me), That Jamshid's chalice I should win And it would see the world therein. That is a pearl by far too rare
To be contained within the shell
Of time and space; lost vagrants there
Upon the ocean's margin, well
We know it is a vain surmise
That we should hold so great a prize.

II

There was a man that loved God well; In every motion of his mind God dwelt; and yet he could not tell That God was in him, being blind: Wherefore as if afar he stood And cried, "Have mercy, O my God!"

III

This problem that had vexed me long Last night unto the taverner I carried; for my hope was strong His judgement sure, that could not err, Might swiftly solve infallibly The riddle that had baffled me.

I saw him standing in his place, A goblet in his grasp, a smile Of right good cheer upon his face, As in the glass he gazed awhile And seemed to view in vision clear A hundred truths reflected there.

IV

"That friend who, being raised sublime Upon the gallows, glorified The tree that slew him for his crime, This was the sin for which he died, That, having secrets in his charge, He told them to the world at large."

So spake he; adding, "But the heart That has the truth within its hold And, practising the rosebud's art, Conceals a mystery in each fold, That heart hath well this comment lined Upon the margin of the mind.

"When Moses unto Pharaoh stood, The men of magic strove in vain Against his miracle of wood; So every subtlety of brain Must surely fail and feeble be Before the soul's supremacy.

"And if the Holy Ghost descend
In grace and power infinite
His comfort in these days to lend
To them that humbly wait on it,
Theirs too the wondrous works can be
That Jesus wrought in Galilee."

v

"What season did the Spirit wise This all-revealing cup assign Within thy keeping?" "When the skies Were painted by the Hand Divine And heaven's mighty void was spanned, Then gave He this into my hand."

"Yon twisted coil, yon chain of hair Why doth the lovely Idol spread To keep me fast and fettered there?" "Ah, Hafiz!", so the wise man said, "'Tis a mad heart, and needs restraint That speaks within thee this complaint."

16 CUP IN HAND

When my Beloved the cup in hand taketh The market of lovely ones slack demand taketh.

I, like a fish, in the ocean am fallen, Till me with the hook yonder Friend to land taketh.

Every one saith, who her tipsy eye seëth, "Where is a shrieve, that this fair firebrand taketh?"

Lo, at her feet in lament am I fallen, Till the Beloved me by the hand taketh.

Happy his heart who, like Hafiz, a goblet Of wine of the Prime Fore-eternal's brand taketh.

J. PAYNE

17 NOT ALL THE SUM OF EARTHLY HAPPINESS

Not all the sum of earthly happiness Is worth the bowed head of a moment's pain, And if I sell for wine my dervish dress, Worth more than what I sell is what I gain! Land where my Lady dwells, thou holdest me Enchained; else Fars were but a barren soil, Not worth the journey over land and sea, Not worth the toil!

Down in the quarter where they sell red wine, My holy carpet scarce would fetch a cup-How brave a pledge of piety is mine, Which is not worth a goblet foaming up! Mine enemy heaped scorn on me and said: "Forth from the tavern gate!" Why am I thrust From off the threshold? is my fallen head Not worth the dust? Wash white that travel-stained sad robe of thine! Where word and deed alike one colour bear, The grape's fair purple garment shall outshine Thy many-coloured rags and tattered gear. Full easy seemed the sorrow of the sea Lightened by hope of gain—hope flew too fast! A hundred pearls were poor indemnity,

The Sultan's crown, with priceless jewels set,
Encircles fear of death and constant dread;
It is a head-dress much desired—and yet
Art sure 'tis worth the danger to the head?
'Twere best for thee to hide thy face from those
That long for thee; the Conqueror's reward
Is never worth the army's long-drawn woes,
Worth fire and sword.

Ah, seek the treasure of a mind at rest
And store it in the treasury of Ease;
Not worth a loyal heart, a tranquil breast,
Were all the riches of thy lands and seas!
Ah, scorn, like Hafiz, the delights of earth,
Ask not one grain of favour from the base,
Two hundred sacks of jewels were not worth
Thy soul's disgrace!

GERTRUDE BELL

18 SLAVES

Slaves of thy shining eyes are even those
That diadems of might and empire bear;
Drunk with the wine that from thy red lip flows,
Are they that e'en the grape's delight forswear.
Drift, like the wind across a violet bed,
Before thy many lovers, weeping low,
And clad like violets in blue robes of woe,
Who feel thy wind-blown hair and bow the head.

Thy messenger the breath of dawn, and mine A stream of tears, since lover and beloved Keep not their secret; through my verses shine, Though other lays my flower's grace have proved And countless nightingales have sung thy praise. When veiled beneath thy curls thou passest, see, To right and leftward those that welcome thee Have bartered peace and rest on thee to gaze!

But thou that knowest God by heart, away! Wine-drunk, love-drunk, we inherit Paradise, His mercy is for sinners; hence and pray Where wine thy cheek red as red erghwan dyes, And leave the cell to faces sinister. Oh Khizr, whose happy feet bathed in life's fount, Help one who toils afoot—the horsemen mount And hasten on their way; I scarce can stir.

Ah, loose me not! ah, set not Hafiz free
From out the bondage of thy gleaming hair!
Safe only those, safe, and at liberty,
That fast enchained in thy linked ringlets are.
But from the image of his dusty cheek
Learn this from Hafiz: proudest heads shall bend,
And dwellers on the threshold of a friend
Be crowned with the dust that crowns the meek.

GERTRUDE BELL

19 LAST NIGHT I DREAMED

Last night I dreamed that angels stood without The tavern door, and knocked in vain, and wept; They took the clay of Adam, and, methought, Moulded a cup therewith while all men slept. Oh dwellers in the halls of Chastity! You brought Love's passionate red wine to me, Down to the dust I am, your bright feet stept. For Heaven's self was all too weak to bear
The burden of His love God laid on it,
He turned to seek a messenger elsewhere,
And in the Book of Fate my name was writ.
Between my Lord and me such concord lies
As makes the Huris glad in Paradise,
With songs of praise through the green glades they flit.

A hundred dreams of Fancy's garnered store Assail me—Father Adam went astray Tempted by one poor grain of corn! Wherefore Absolve and pardon him that turns away Though the soft breath of Truth reaches his ears, For two-and-seventy jangling creeds he hears, And loud-voiced Fable calls him ceaselessly.

That, that is not the flame of Love's true fire Which makes the torchlight shadows dance in rings, But where the radiance draws the moth's desire And sends him forth with scorched and drooping wings. The heart of one who dwells retired shall break, Rememb'ring a black mole and a red cheek, And his life ebb, sapped at its secret springs.

Yet since the earliest time that man has sought To comb the locks of Speech, his goodly bride, Not one, like Hafiz, from the face of Thought Has torn the veil of Ignorance aside.

GERTRUDE BELL

20 CONVERSATION

[&]quot;Ah, when shall I to thy mouth and lips attain?"

[&]quot;'Fore God, but speak, for thy word is sovereign."

[&]quot;'Tis Egypt's tribute thy lips require for fee."

[&]quot;In such transaction the less the loss shall be."

- "What lip is worthy the tip of thy mouth to hold?"
- "To none but initiates may this tale be told."
- "Adore not idols, but sit with the One, the True!"
- "In the street of Love it is lawful both to do."
- "The tavern's breath is balm to the spirit's smart."
- "And blessed are they that comfort the lonely heart."
- "No part of faith is the dervish cloak and the wine."
- "Yet both are found in this Magian faith of mine."
- "What gain can coral lips to an old man bring?"
- "A honeyed kiss, and his youth's recovering."
- "And when shall bridegroom come to the couch of the bride?"
- "The morn that Moon and Jupiter stand allied."
- "Still Hafiz prays for thy yet ascending might."
- "So pray and praise the angels in heaven's height."

A. J. A

21 SPRING

Cypress and Tulip and sweet Eglantine,
Of these the tale from lip to lip is sent;
Washed by three cups, oh Saki, of thy wine,
My song shall turn upon this argument.
Spring, bride of all the meadows, rises up,
Clothed in her ripest beauty: fill the cup!
Of Spring's handmaidens runs this song of mine.

The sugar-loving birds of distant Ind, Except a Persian sweetmeat that was brought To fair Bengal, have found nought to their mind. See how my song, that in one night was wrought, Defies the limits set by space and time! O'er plains and mountain-tops my fearless rhyme, Child of a night, its year-long road shall find. And thou whose sense is dimmed with piety,
Thou too shalt learn the magic of her eyes;
Forth comes the caravan of sorcery
When from those gates the blue-veined curtains rise.
And when she walks the flowery meadows through,
Upon the jasmine's shamed cheek the dew
Gathers like sweat, she is so fair to see!

Ah, swerve not from the path of righteousness Though the world lure thee! like a wrinkled crone, Hiding beneath her robe lasciviousness, She plunders them that pause and heed her moan. From Sinai Moses brings thee wealth untold; Bow not thine head before the calf of gold Like Samir, following after wickedness.

From the Shah's garden blows the wind of Spring, The tulip in her lifted chalice bears
A dewy wine of Heaven's minist'ring;
Until Ghiyasuddin, the Sultan, hears,
Sing, Hafiz, of thy longing for his face.
The breezes whispering round thy dwelling-place
Shall carry thy lament unto the King.

GERTRUDE BELL

22 THE ROSE RETURNS

Returns again to the pleasaunce the rose, alive from the dead; Before her feet in obeisance is bowed the violet's head.

The earth is gemmed as the skies are, the buds a zodiac band, For signs in happy ascendant and sweet conjunction spread.

Now kiss the cheek of the Saki to sound of tabor and pipe, To voice of viol and harp-string the wine of dawntide wed.

The rose's season bereave not of wine and music and love, For as the days of a man's life her little week is fled. The faith of old Zoroaster renews the garden again, For lo, the tulip is kindled with fire of Nimrod red.

The earth is even as Eden, this hour of lily and rose; This hour, alas! Not an Eden's eternal dwelling-stead!

The rose with Solomon rides, borne aloft on wings of the wind; The bulbul's anthem at dawn like the voice of David is shed.

Fill high the bowl to our lord's name, 'Imād-ud-Din Mahmūd; Behold King Solomon's Asaph in him incarnated.

Beyond eternity's bounds stretch the gracious shade of his might; Beneath that shadow, O HAFIZ, be thine eternity sped.

WALTER LEAF

23 TULIPS

When from the goblet's eastern brim shall rise

The gladd'ning sun-beams of our sparkling wine;

To grace the maid, tulips of richest dyes

Shall on her cheek's empurpled garden shine.

The gale shall spread yon hyacinthine wreaths
O'er the warm bosom of the blushing rose;
When, scented by those locks, it softly breathes
From the sweet maze where many a flow'ret blows.

The night that parts a lover from his love,
Is fraught with such distress, such tender wail;
That scanty would an hundred volumes prove,
To register the fond, the mournful tale.

Be thine the steady patience, that sustain'd
The prophet Noah, when the deluge rose;
Then shall the wish of countless years be gain'd,
And joyful terminate thy lengthen'd woes.

The fav'rite hope, long foster'd in thy breast,
Thy single effort never will obtain:
The wish'd success on various aids must rest;
Without those aids thy own attempts are vain.

O, let not avarice tempt thy wild desires
To toil for wealth in fortune's glitt'ring mine!
Small is the pittance mortal man requires,
And trifling labour makes that pittance thine.

Should the sweet gales, as o'er thy tomb they play,
The fragraunce of the nymph's lov'd tresses bring;
Then, Haufez, shall new life inspire thy clay,
And ceaseless notes of rapture shalt thou sing.

J. NOTT

24 I CEASE NOT FROM DESIRE

I cease not from desire till my desire
Is satisfied; or let my mouth attain
My love's red mouth, or let my soul expire,
Sighed from those lips that sought her lips in vain.
Others may find another love as fair;
Upon her threshold I have laid my head,
The dust shall cover me, still lying there,
When from my body life and love have fled.

My soul is on my lips ready to fly,
But grief beats in my heart and will not cease,
Because not once, not once before I die,
Will her sweet lips give all my longing peace.
My breath is narrowed down to one long sigh
For a red mouth that burns my thoughts like fire;
When will that mouth draw near and make reply
To one whose life is straitened with desire?

When I am dead, open my grave and see The cloud of smoke that rises round thy feet: In my dead heart the fire still burns for thee; Yea, the smoke rises from my winding-sheet! Ah, come, Beloved! for the meadows wait Thy coming, and the thorn bears flowers instead Of thorns, the cypress fruit, and desolate Bare winter from before thy steps has fled. Hoping within some garden ground to find A red rose soft and sweet as thy soft cheek, Through every meadow blows the western wind, Through every garden he is fain to seek. Reveal thy face! that the whole world may be Bewildered by thy radiant loveliness; The cry of man and woman comes to thee, Open thy lips and comfort their distress! Each curling lock of thy luxuriant hair Breaks into barbèd hooks to catch my heart, My broken heart is wounded everywhere With countless wounds from which the red drops start. Yet when sad lovers meet and tell their sighs, Not without praise shall Hafiz' name be said, Not without tears, in those pale companies Where joy has been forgot and hope has fled.

GERTRUDE BELL

25 LIGHT IN DARKNESS

High-nesting in the stately fir,
The enduring nightingale again
Unto the rose in passionate strain
Singeth: "All ill be far from her!
"In gratitude for this, O rose,
That thou the Queen of Beauty art,
Pity the nightingales' mad heart,
Be not contemptuous of those."

I do not rail against my fate
When thou dost hide thy face from me;
Joy wells not of propinquity
Save in the heart once desolate.

If other men are gay and glad That life is joy and festival, I do exult and glory all Because her beauty makes me sad.

And if for maids of Paradise And heavenly halls the monk aspires, The Friend fulfils my heart's desires, The Tavern will for heaven suffice.

Drink wine, and let the lute vibrate; Grieve not; if any tell to thee, "Wine is a great iniquity", Say, "Allah is compassionate!"

Why, Hafiz, art thou sorrowing, Why is thy heart in absence rent? Union may come of banishment, And in the darkness light doth spring.

A. J. A.

26 O ASK NOT

O love, how have I felt thy pain!

Ask me not how—
O absence, how I drank thy bane!

Ask me not how—

In quest, throughout the world I err'd, And whom, at last, have I preferr'd? O ask not whom—

In hope her threshold's dust to spy, How streamed down my longing eye! O ask not how—

109

Why bite my friends their lips, displeas'd? Know they what ruby lip I seiz'd? O ask not when—

But yester-night, this very ear
Such language from her mouth did hear—
O ask not what—

Like Hafiz, in love's mazy round, My feet, at length, their goal have found, O ask not where,

H. H.

27 SHIRAZ

Shiraz, city of the heart,
God preserve thee!
Pearl of capitals thou art,
Ahl to serve thee.

Ruknabad, of thee I dream, Fairy river:

Whoso drinks thy running stream Lives for ever.

Wind that blows from Ispahan,
Whence thy sweetness?
Flowers ran with thee as thou ran
With such fleetness.

Flowers from Jafarabad,
Made of flowers;
Thou for half-way house hast had Musella's bowers.

Right through Shiraz the path goes
Of perfection;
Anyone in Shiraz knows
Its direction.

Spend not on Egyptian sweets
Shiraz money;

Sweet enough in Shiraz streets Shiraz honey.

East Wind, hast thou aught to tell Of my gipsy?

Was she happy? Was she well? Was she tipsy?

Wake me not, I pray thee, friend, From my sleeping;

Soon my little dream must end; Waking's weeping.

Hafiz, though his blood she spill, Right he thinks it;

Like mother's milk 'tis his will That she drinks it.

R. LE GALLIENNE

28 RANG THROUGH THE DIM TAVERN

Rang through the dim tavern a voice yesterday, "Pardon for sins! Drinkers of wine, drink! Ye may!" Such was the word; hear the good news, Angel-borne; Mercy divine still to the end holds its way.

Great are our sins; greater is God's grace than all; Deep are his hid counsels, and who says them nay? Bear her away, Reason the Dull, tavernwards, There shall the red wine set her pale veins a-play. Union with Him strife or essay forceth not; Yet, O my heart, e'en to the full, strive, essay. Still is my ear ringed of His locks ringleted, Still on the wine-threshold my face prone I lay.

HAFIZ, awake! Toping no more counts for sin, Now that our Lord Royal hath put sins away.

WALTER LEAF

29 THE LESSON OF THE FLOWERS

'Twas morning, and the Lord of day
Had shed his light o'er Shiraz' towers,
Where bulbuls trill their love-lorn lay
To serenade the maiden flowers.

Like them, oppressed by love's sweet pain, I wander in a garden fair; And there, to cool my throbbing brain, I woo the perfumed morning air.

The damask rose with beauty gleams,
Its face all bathed in ruddy light,
And shines like some bright star that beams
From out the sombre veil of night.

The very bulbul, as the glow
Of pride and passion warms its breast,
Forgets awhile its former woe
In pride that conquers love's unrest.

The sweet narcissus opes its eye,
A teardrop glistening on the lash,
As though 'twere gazing piteously
Upon the tulip's bleeding gash.

The lily seemed to menace me,
And showed its curved and quivering blade,
While every frail anemone
A gossip's open mouth displayed.

And here and there a graceful group
Of flowers, like men who worship wine,
Each raising up his little stoup
To catch the dewdrop's draught divine.

And others yet like Hebes stand,

Their dripping vases downward turned,
As if dispensing to the band

The wine for which their hearts had burned.

This moral it is mine to sing:
Go learn a lesson of the flowers;
Joy's season is in life's young spring,
Then seize, like them, the fleeting hours.

E. H. PALMER

30 HOPE

What though a thousand enemies propose To slay me,

With thee my loving friend, how shall my foes Affray me?

This is my hope of life, to hold thee nigh To cherish;

Absent, it is my constant fear that I Must perish.

(Each breath the breeze brings not to me her scent I languish, E'en as the mournful rose, whose robe is rent In anguish.)

Shall slumber drowse my senses, and mine eyes Not view thee?

Or, being far, my heart not agonize

To woo thee?

Better than others' balm, thy blade to endure Doth please me;

Thy mortal poison, than another's cure To ease me. Slain by thy sword, eternal life is mine To inherit;

To die for thee, were benison divine Of spirit.

Swerve not thy steed; spare not thy lance's tip Nor falter;

My head shall be thy mark, my hand yet grip Thy halter.

(Yet how shall every sight attain to thy True being?

For as the mind doth know, so much the eye Hath seeing.)

All men shall say that Hafiz hath renown Immortal,

Whene'er his head gaineth its dusty crown, Thy portal.

A. J. A.

31 GIVE

Give, O Give love's sportful joys; Youth, and all that youth employs; Wine like rubies bright, and red; And the board with dainties spread; Gay associates, fond to join In the cup of circling wine!

Give the handmaid's lip divine, Blushing deeper than her wine; Minstrels vers'd in tuneful art; And the friend that's next our heart; With the valued, chearful soul, Drainer of the brim-full bowl!

Give the nymph, that's tender, kind, Pure in heart, and pure in mind, As th' unsullied fount that laves
Eden's banks with blissful waves,
And whose beauty sweetly bright
Shames the clear moon's full-orb'd light!

Give the festive hall, that vies With our boasted Paradise; Round it, breathing rich perfume, Let refreshing roses bloom; Such as, with unfading grace, Deck the blest abode of peacel

Give companions, who unite
In one wish, and one delight;
Brisk attendants, who improve
All the joys of wine and love;
Friends who hold our secrets dear,
And the friend who loves good chearl

Give the juice of rosy hue, Briskly sparkling to the view, Richly bitter, richly sweet, Such as will exhilarate: While the fair-one's rubi'd lip Flavours ev'ry cup we sip.

Give the girl, whose sword-like eye Bids the understanding die, Tempting mortals to their fate With the goblet's smiling bait; Damsels give with flowing hair, Guileful as the hunter's snare!

Give, to spend the classic hour, One deep-read in learned lore, One, whose merry, tuneful vein Flows like our gay poet's strain, And whose open generous mind Blesses and improves mankind! Mortals, wilfully unwise, Who these mirthful gifts despise, Entertain no pleasing sense Of voluptuous elegance: Scarce of such can it be said, That they differ from the dead.

J. NOTT

32 WHERE ARE THE TIDINGS OF UNION?

Where are the tidings of union? that I may arise— Forth from the dust I will rise up to welcome thee! My soul, like a homing bird, yearning for Paradise, Shall arise and soar, from the snares of the world set free. When the voice of thy love shall call me to be thy slave, I shall rise to a greater far than the mastery Of life and the living, time and the mortal span: Pour down, oh Lord! from the clouds of thy guiding grace The rain of a mercy that quickeneth on my grave, Before, like dust that the wind bears from place to place, I arise and flee beyond the knowledge of man. When to my grave thou turnest thy blessed feet, Wine and the lute thou shalt bring in thine hand to me, Thy voice shall ring through the folds of my winding-sheet, And I will arise and dance to thy minstrelsy. Though I be old, clasp me one night to thy breast, And I, when the dawn shall come to awaken me. With the flush of youth on my cheek from thy bosom will rise. Rise up! let mine eyes delight in thy stately grace! Thou art the goal to which all men's endeavour has pressed, And thou the idol of Hafiz' worship; thy face From the world and life shall bid him come forth and arise!

GERTRUDE BELL

ı

Within the Magian tavern
The light of God I see;
In such a place, O wonder!
Shines out such radiancy.

Boast not, O king of pilgrims,
The privilege of thee:
Thou viewest God's own Temple;
God shews Himself to me.

2

Combed from the fair ones' tresses
I win sweet musk to-day,
But ah! the distant fancy
That I should gain Cathay.

3

A fiery heart, tears flowing,
Night's sorrow, dawn's lament—
All this to me dispenses
Your glance benevolent.

4

My fancy's way thine image
Arresteth momently;
Whom shall I tell, what marvels
Within this veil I see?

Not all the musk of China,
The scents of Tartary,
Excel those subtle odours
The dawn breeze wafts to me.

If Hafiz plays at glances, Friends, be not critical: For truly, as I know him, He truly loves you all.

A. J. A

34 DUST

Come, let us pass this pathway o'er
That to the tavern leads;
There waits the wine, and there the door
That every traveller needs.

On that first day, when we did swear To tipple and to kiss, It was our oath, that we would fare No other way but this.

Where Jamshid's crown and royal throne
Go sweeping down the wind,
'Tis little comfort we should moan:
In wine is joy to find.

Because we hope that we may bring Her waist to our embrace, Lo, in our life-blood issuing We linger in this place.

Preacher, our frenzy is complete: Waste not thy sage advice;— We stand in the Beloved's street, And seek not Paradise.

Let Sufis wheel in mystic dance And shout for ecstasy; We, too, have our exuberance, We, too, ecstatics be. The earth with pearls and rubies gleams
Where thou hast poured thy wine;
Less than the dust are we, it seems,
Beneath thy foot divine.

Hafiz, since we may never soar

To ramparts of the sky,

Here at the threshold of this door

Forever let us lie.

A. J. A.

35 SEASON OF THE ROSE

The season comes, that breathes of joy, In rosy garment drest;

Let mirth, my friends, your care employ; O, hail the smiling guest!

Old-age now warns us to improve

The vernal hours with wine and love.

To the fond wishes of the heart

How few are gen'rous found!

And the sweet hours, which bliss impart,

Pass on in hasty round:

Then, for the wine I love so well,

My sacred carpet I will sell.

The gale, that smells of spring, is sweet; But sweeter, should the fair,

With winning elegance replete,

Its grateful freshness share:

By her gay presence chear'd, we pass

With brisker glee the rosy glass.

Soft sweep the lyre of trembling strings;

'Twill fate's black rage suppress;

Fate o'er the child of merit flings

The mantle of distress:

Then let loud sorrow's wailing cry Be drown'd in floods of melody.

With boiling passion's eager haste,
Comes forth the blushing rose;
Shall we not wine like water waste,
Soft dashing as it flows?
Now that our throbbing bosoms prove
The wild desires of hope, and love.

O Haufez! thy delightful lay,
That on the wild wind floats,
Resembles much, our poets say,
The nightingale's rich notes;
What wonder then, thy music flows
In the sweet season of the rose.

J. NOTT

36 MYSTERY

1

Monarch of firs that stately rise, Of honeyed lips sole emperor, The arrows of whose flashing eyes Transfix the bravest conqueror—

Lately in wine as passing by
This lowly beggar he espied,
"O thou", he said, "the lamp and eye
Of such as make sweet words their pride!

"How long of silver and of gold Shall thy poor purse undowered be? Be thou my slave, and then, behold! All silver limbs shall cherish thee.

"Art thou a mote, my little one? Be not so humble: play at love! And thou shalt whisper to the sun, Whirling within its sphere above. "Put not thy trust in this world's vows; But if thou canst a goblet get, Enjoy the arched and lovely brows, The bodies soft and delicate!"

2

Then spake my elder of the bowl (Peace to his spirit Allah grant!):
"Entrust not thy immortal soul
To such as break their covenant.
"Leave enemies to go their road;
Lay hold upon the Loved One's hem;
As thou wouldst be a man of God,
Such men are devils: heed not them."

3

I walked where tulips blossomed red, And whispered to the morning breeze: "Who are you martyrs cold and dead, Whose bloody winding-sheets are these?" "Hafiz", he answered, "'tis not mine Or thine to know this mystery; Let all thy tale of ruby wine, And sugar lips, and kisses be!"

A. J. A.

37 RAPTURE'S VISION

Say, where is rapture's vision? Eyes on the Loved One bending, More high than kingly splendour, Love's fane as bedesman tending.

Light 'twere, desire to sever forth from the soul, but natheless Soul-friends depart asunder—there, there the pain transcending! Fain in the garden budlike close-wrapped were I, thereafter Frail reputation's vestment bloomlike asunder rending;

Now like the zephyr breathing love-tales in roses' hearing, Now from the yearning bulbul love's myst'ry apprehending.

While yet the hand availeth, sweet lips to kiss delay not; Else lip and hand thou bitest too late, when comes the ending.

Waste not the hour of friendship; outside this House of Two Doors

Friends soon shall part asunder, no more together wending.

Clean out of mind of Sultan Mansur hath HAFIZ wandered; Lord, bring him back the olden kind heart, the poor befriending.

WALTER LEAF

38 WINE WORSHIP

Saki, the dawn is breaking;
Fill up the glass with wine.

Heaven's wheel no delay is making—
Haste, haste, while the day is thine!

Ere to our final ruin

Space and the world speed by,

Let wine be our great undoing,

Red wine, let us drink and diel

See, on the bowl's horizon
Wine, the red sun, doth rise:
Here's glory to feast the eyes on—
Drive sleep from thy languid eyes!

When Fate on his wheel is moulding Jars from this clay of mine, Let this be the cup thou'rt holding And fill up my head with wine!

Never was I a shrinker,

No hypocrite monk am I;

Let wine, the pure wine of the drinker

Be the talk men address me by.

Wine is the sole salvation,
Its worship and works sublime;
Be firm thy determination,
Hafiz—be saved in time!

A. J. A.

39 HARVEST

In the green sky I saw the new moon reaping,
And minded was I of my own life's field:
What harvest wilt thou to the sickle yield
When through thy fields the moon-shaped knife goes sweeping?

In other fields the sunlit blade is growing,
But still thou sleepest on and takest no heed;
The sun is up, yet idle is thy seed:
Thou sowest not, though all the world is sowing.

Back laughed I at myself: All this thou'rt telling Of seed-time! The whole harvest of the sky Love for a single barley-corn can buy, The Pleiads at two barley-corns are selling.

Thieves of the starry night with plunder shining,
I trust you not, for who was it but you
Stole Kawou's crown, and robbed great Kaikhosru
Of his king's girdle—thieves, for all your shining!

Once on the starry chess-board stretched out yonder
The sun and moon played chess with her I love,
And, when it came round to her turn to move,
She played her mole—and won—and can you wonder?

Ear-rings suit better thy small ears than reason, Yet in their pink shells wear these words to-day: "HAFIZ has warned me all must pass away— Even my beauty is but for a season."

R. LE GALLIENNE

40 ALL MY PLEASURE

All my pieasure is to sip
Wine from my beloved's lip;
I have gained the utmost bliss—
God alone be praised for this.

Fate, my old and stubborn foe, Never let my darling go: Give my mouth the golden wine And her lips incarnadine.

(Clerics bigoted for God, Elders who have lost the road— These have made a tale of us "Drunken sots and bibulous."

Let th' ascetic's life be dim, I will nothing have of him; If the monk will pious be, God forgive his piety!)

Darling, what have I to say
Of my grief, with thee away,
Save with tears and scalding eyes
And a hundred burning sighs?

Let no infidel behold All the bitterness untold Cypress knows to see thy grace, Jealous moon to view thy face.

It is yearning for thy kiss That hath wrought in Hafiz this, That no more he hath in care Nightly lecture, matin prayer.

A. J. A.

41 THE RIDDLE OF LIFE

With last night's wine still singing in my head, I sought the tavern at the break of day, Though half the world was still asleep in bed; The harp and flute were up and in full swing, And a most pleasant morning sound made they; Already was the wine-cup on the wing. "Reason", said I, "'tis past the time to start, If you would reach your daily destination, The holy city of intoxication." So did I pack him off, and he depart With a stout flask for fellow-traveller.

Left to myself, the tavern-wench I spied,
And sought to win her love by speaking fair;
Alas! she turned upon me, scornful-eyed,
And mocked my foolish hopes of winning her.
Said she, her arching eyebrows like a bow:
"Thou mark for all the shafts of evil tongues!
Thou shalt not round my middle clasp me so,
Like my good girdle—not for all thy songs!—
So long as thou in all created things
Seest but thyself the centre and the end.
Go spread thy dainty nets for other wings—
Too high the Anca's nest for thee, my friend."

Then took I shelter from that stormy sea In the good ark of wine; yet, woe is me! Saki and comrade and minstrel all by turns, She is of maidens the compendium Who my poor heart in such a fashion spurns. Self, HAFIZ, self! That must thou overcome! Hearken the wisdom of the tavern-daughter! Vain little baggage—well, upon my word! Thou fairy figment made of clay and water, As busy with thy beauty as a bird.

Well, HAFIZ, Life's a riddle—give it up: There is no answer to it but this cup.

R. LE GALLIENNE

42 THE DRUNKARD

Come, vex me not with this eternal spite; For old companionship demands its right. Heed then my counsel, costlier and more rare Than all the jewels in thy casket there. Yet how to drunkards shall thy face be shown That holds a mirror to the sun and moon?

Chide not the drunkard, greybeard; peace, be still; Or wouldst thou quarrel with the Heavenly will? Fearest thou not the fiery breath of me Shall burn the woollen cassock circling thee?

Pour me the wine of yesternight again To ease the throbbing of a bankrupt's brain.

Hafiz, thy songs of songs are loveliest; I swear it, by the Scriptures in thy breast!

A. J. A.

43 MAN OF SELF

Man of Self, lifted up with endless pride, We forgive thee—for Love to thee is denied.

Hover not round the raving lovers' haunts; Take thy "Reason Supreme" for goal and guide!

What of Love's drunken frenzy knows that brain That the grape's earthly juice alone hath plied?

Get a Moon-love, and teach thy heart to strive, Though thy fame, like a sun, be spread world-wide.

'Tis the white face, the anguish-burdened sigh, Tell the secrets the heart of love would hide.

Let the bowl clear the fumes that rack thy brain; HAFIZ, drink deep, and name and fame be defied.

WALTER LEAF

AA ROSE AND NIGHTINGALE

I walked within a garden fair At dawn, to gather roses there; When suddenly sounded in the dale The singing of a nightingale.

Alas, he loved a rose, like me, And he, too, loved in agony; Tumbling upon the mead he sent The cataract of his lament.

With sad and meditative pace I wandered in that flowery place, And thought upon the tragic tale Of love, and rose, and nightingale.

The rose was lovely, as I tell; The nightingale he loved her well; He with no other love could live, And she no kindly word would give.

It moved me strangely, as I heard The singing of that passionate bird; So much it moved me, I could not Endure the burden of his throat. Full many a fair and fragrant rose Within the garden freshly blows, Yet not a bloom was ever torn Without the wounding of the thorn.

Think not, O Hafiz, any cheer To gain of Fortune's wheeling sphere; Fate has a thousand turns of ill, And never a tremor of good will.

A. J. A.

45 LOVE'S LANGUAGE

Breeze of the morning, at the hour thou knowest, The way thou knowest, and to her thou knowest, Of lovely secrets trusty messenger, I beg thee carry this despatch for me; Command I may not: this is but a prayer Making appeal unto thy courtesy.

Speak thus, when thou upon my errand goest:
"My soul slips from my hand, so weak am I;
Unless thou heal it by the way thou knowest,
Balm of a certain ruby, I must die."

Say further, sweetheart wind, when thus thou blowest:
"What but thy little girdle of woven gold
Should the firm centre of my hopes enfold?
Thy legendary waist doth it not hold,
And mystic treasures which thou only knowest?"

Say too: "Thy captive begs that thou bestowest The boon of thy swift falchion in his heart; As men for water thirst he to depart By the most speedy way of death thou knowest.

"I beg thee that to no one else thou showest
These words I send—in such a hidden way
That none but thou may cipher what I say;
Read them in some safe place as best thou knowest."

When in her heart these words of mine thou sowest For HAFIZ, speak in any tongue thou knowest; Turkish and Arabic in love are one—Love speaks all languages beneath the sun.

R. LE GALLIENNE

46 SAKI SONG

1

Come, saki, come, your wine ecstatic bring, Augmenting grace, the soul's perfectioning; Fill up my glass, for I am desperate— Lo, bankrupt of both parts is my estate.

Bring, saki, bring your wine, and Jamshid's bowl Shall therewith bear to view the vast void whole; Pour on, that with this bowl to fortify I may, like Jamshid, every secret spy.

Bring, saki, bring your alchemy divine Where Korah's wealth and Noah's years combine; Pour on, and there shall open forth to thee The gates of fame and immortality.

Bring wine, O saki, and its image there To Jamshid and Chosroes shall greeting bear; Pour on, and to the pipe's note I shall say How Jamshid fared, and Ka'us, in their day.

Sing of this old world's ways, and with your strings Make proclamation to those ancient kings.

Still spreads the same far desert to be crossed Where Salm and Tur their mighty armies lost;

Still stands the selfsame crumbling hostelry Afrasiyab took his palace for to be.

Where now the captains that his armies led, And where the sword-swift champion at their head? High was his palace; ruin is its doom;

Lost now to memory his very tomb.

Bring, saki, bring your virgin chastely veiled, Your tavern-dweller drunkenly regaled; Fill up, for I am avid of ill fame, And seek in wine and bowl my utmost shame.

Bring, saki, bring such brain-enflaming juice As lions drink, and let wide havoc loose; Pour on, and lion-like I'll break the snare Of this old world, and rise to rule the air.

Bring wine, O saki, that the houris spice With angel fragrance out of Paradise; Pour on, and putting incense to the fire The mind's eternal pleasure I'll acquire.

Bring, saki, bring your throne-bestowing wine: My heart bears witness it is pure and fine; Pour on, that, shriven in the tide of it, I may arise triumphant from the pit.

Why must I yet the body's captive be,
When spiritual gardens call to me?
Give me to drink, till I am full of wine,
Then mark what wisdom and what power are mine;
Into my keeping let your goblet pass,
And I will view the world within that glass;
Intoxicate, of saintliness I'll sing,
And in my beggar's rags I'll play the king.
When Hafiz lifts his voice in drunken cheer,
Venus applauds his anthem from her sphere.

A. J.

47 WILD DEER

I

Whither fled, wild deer?

I knew thee well in days gone by,
When we were fast friends, thou and I;
Two solitary travellers now,
Bewildered, friendless, I and thou,
We go our separate ways, where fear
Lurks ambushed, front and rear.

Come, let us now enquire

How each is faring; let us gain
(If gain we may, upon this plain
Of trouble vast, where pastures pure

From fear secure

Are not to find) the spirit's far desire.

2

Beloved friends, declare:
What manner of man is there
That shall the lonely heart befriend,
That shall the desolate attend?
Khizer, the heavenly guide,
He of the footfall sanctified,
Perchance he cometh, and shall bring
In purpose deep and mercy wide
An end of all my wayfaring.

3

'Twas little courtesy
That ancient comrade shewed to me.
Moslems, in Allah's name I cry!
The pitiless blow he struck me by,

So pitiless, to strike apart
The cords that bound us heart to heart,
To strike as if it were
No love was ever there.

He went; and I that was so gay
To grief convert; was such the way
Brother should act with brother? Yea,
Khizer, the heavenly guide,
He of the footfall sanctified,
Haply the shadow of his gracious wing
Lone soul to lonely soul shall bring.

4

But surely this the season is
When of the bounty that is His Allah dispenses; for I took Lately this omen from the Book:
"Leave me not issueless!" the Prophet cried.

It happened on a day one sat beside
The road, a rare bold fellow; when there went Upon that way a traveller intent
To gain the goal. Gently the other spake:
"What in thy scrip, Sir traveller, dost thou take?
If it be truly grain, come, set thy snare."
The traveller answered, "Grain indeed I bear;
But, mark this well, the quarry I would win
Shall be the Phoenix." "Certes, then how begin
The quest?" the other asked. "What sign has thou
To lead thee to his eyrie? Not till now
Have we discovered any mark to guide
Upon that quest. By what weight fortified
Shall our dire need those scales essay to hold
Wherein the sun hath cast his purse of gold?"

Since that cypress tall and straight Joined the parting camel-train, By the cypress sit, and wait Watchful till he come again. Here, beside the bubbling spring Where the limpid river runs, Softly weep, remembering Those beloved departed ones. As each pallid ghost appears, Speak the epic of thy pain, While the shower of thy tears Mingles with the summer rain. And the river at thy feet Sadly slow, and full of sighs, Tributaries new shall meet From the fountains of thine eves.

6

Give never the wine-bowl from thy hand, Nor loose thy grasp on the rose's stem; 'Tis a mad, bad world that the Fates have planned—Match wit with their every stratagem!

Comrades, know each other's worth; And when ye have this comment lined Upon the margin of the mind,

Recite the text by heart:
So say the moralists of this earth;
For lo, the archer ambushed waits,
Th' unerring archer of the Fates,
To strike old friends apart.

7

When I take pen in hand to write
And thus my marshalled thoughts indite,
By the Eternal Pen,
What magic numbers then

Flow from my fingers, what divine
And holy words are mine!
For I have mingled Soul with Mind,
Whereof the issuing seed I have consigned
To music's fruitful earth;
Which compound brings to birth
(As having for its quintessential part Of poesy the purest art)
Most gladsome mirth.

Then come, I bid thee; let this fragrant scent
Of fairest hope, and soft content,
Bear to thy soul delight eternal:
For verily the musk's sweet blandishment
Was sprinkled from the robe of sprites supernal;
It was not wafted here
From that wild, man-forsaking deer!

A. J. A.

48 THE TIMES ARE OUT OF JOINT

Again the times are out of joint; and again
For wine and the loved one's languid glance I am fain.
The wheel of fortune's sphere is a marvellous thing:
What next proud head to the lowly dust will it bring?
Or if my Magian elder kindle the light,
Whose lantern, pray, will blaze aflame and be bright?
'Tis a famous tale, the deceitfulness of earth;
The night is pregnant: what will dawn bring to birth?
Tumult and bloody battle rage in the plain:
Bring blood-red wine, and fill the goblet again!

A. J. A.

49 THE CRIER

Send the criers round the market, call the royst'rers' band to hear, Crying, "O yes! All ye good folk through the Loved One's realm, give ear!

"Lost, a handmaid! Strayed a while since! Lost, the Vine's wild daughter, lost!

Raise the hue and cry to seize her! Danger lurks where she is near.

"Round her head she wears a foam-crown; all her garb glows ruby-hued;

Thief of wits is she; detain her, lest ye dare not sleep for fear.

"Whoso brings me back the tart maid, take for sweetmeat all my soul!

Though the deepest hell conceal her, go ye down, go hale her here.

"She's a wastrel, she's a wanton, shame-abandoned, rosy-red; If ye find her, send her forthright back to HAFIZ, Balladier."

WALTER LEAF

50 ISMAIL

Ismail is dead, of men and cadis best: His pen, like its great master, takes its rest.

Much wrote he of God's law, and lived it too—Would I could say as much for me and you!

The middle of the week he went away—
The month of Rajab it was, and the eighth day.

In this uncertain dwelling ill at ease, To a more ordered house he went for peace.

His home is now with God, and if you write "The mercy of God", interpreting aright

The mystic letters standing side by side, You then shall read the year when Ismail died.

R. LE GALLIENNE

NOTES

MQ 1, B 1, RS 1, F 1, P 1.

- 1. First hemistich was stated by the Turkish commentator Sūdī (d. 1006/1598) to be a quotation (tadmīn) from the Umayyad caliph-poet Yazīd b. Mu'āwiya (d. 64/683); and this statement has been accepted by most modern editors without question. But Mīrzā Muḥammad Qazvīnī in an article contributed to the Tehran periodical Yūdgār (vol. 1, no. 9, pp. 69-78) argues cogently in rejection of the attribution.
- 2. For the alternative interpretations of بيوى. For the alternative interpretations of بيوى
- 3. For in Freads امن Freads امن Freads امن The poet compares this world with the alighting-place (manzil) of a caravantrain; every moment the bell of a camel departing from the caravanserai warns all other travellers that their lodgment there is only temporary, and that they too must soon be quitting this life.
- 4. The بير مغان ("Magian elder") is the symbol of the man intimate with all the secrets of life; he knows by experience that reason is powerless to solve the ultimate riddle of the universe (cf. 38), and that it is only the wine of unreason that makes life in this world a tolerable burden. For a fuller treatment of this theme, see no. 15. The terms sālik and manāzil belong to the technical vocabulary of the Ṣūfīs, see R. A. Nicholson, The Mystics of Islam, p. 28.
- 5. A fine description of the "dark night of the soul"; the imagery of the sea is more common in Persian mystical poetry than might have been expected of a people little given to seafaring. WC, 1, 3 gives the usual interpretations of "the light-burthened ones of the shores"; it seems more probable, however, that the poet is here referring, as so often, to the orthodox worshipper (whether ritualist or Ṣūfī) whose feet are firmly planted on his faith so that he has no comprehension of the agonies of the insatiably inquisitive soul.

- 6. For Si P reads Si It is the eternal affliction of the lover of God that he is constrained by the ecstasy of his emotion to reveal the secret that should remain hidden; so did Ḥallāj, who paid for his indiscretion upon the gallows, see 158. The biography of the poet 'Irāqī offers an excellent illustration of this theme, see my Song of Lovers, pp. xv-xvi.
- 7. The pattern of the poem is completed by rounding it off, as it was begun, with a hemistich in Arabic.

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 6 5 7.

Other verse-translations by GB, JP, HB, RAN, JR, RG.

2

MQ 2, B 12, RS 12, P 5.

- 1. By salāh the poet clearly intends formal righteousness; he has abandoned the safe piety of the ritualist for the dissolute intoxication of unreason; so l. 3 expands the theme.
- 2. The cloister and penitential robes of the Ṣūfī are as unsatisfying and hypocritical to the true lover as the formal religion of the orthodox theologian and lawyer.
- 3. Listening to music was condemned by the orthodox as an unlawful pleasure, and many Sūfī sects agreed with this prohibition; cf. Tale 20 in chapter 2 of Sa'dī's Gulistān (my Kings and Beggars, pp. 84-6). The hearing of sermons on certain days was on the other hand a well-approved exercise, and many Sūfī books, e.g. the Kitāb sittīn majālis of 'Abd al-Qādir al-Jīlānī (d. 561/1166) are collections of such addresses.

4. The hearts of the enemies of God (the ritualists) are like extinguished candles, they do not blaze with the flame of love kindled by the contemplation of the Divine beauty. Cf. R. A. Nicholson's translation (Eastern Poetry and Prose, p. 173) of a fragment from Hāfiz:

"Of this fierce glow that Love and You Within my breast inspire,
The Sun is but a spark that flew
And set the heavens afire!"

- 5. For بفرياد P reads بفرياد "The dust which collects on the tomb (of a saint) and the railing is considered to be sacred...It is carefully swept up and sold in small quantities to pilgrims, and when they are making the circumambulation of the tomb, those who have sore eyes will put their fingers through the railing, to get a bit of this dust and rub it on their eyes. It is used also to cure burns, or other wounds, and swellings; it is thought to possess the power to raise the dead and is often given to one in a swoon." B. A. Donaldson, The Wild Rue, p. 67.
- 6. The dimple in the chin of the Beloved is a pitfall for the unwary traveller; yet the desolation of unrequited love is a necessary condition of the pilgrim's progress.
- 7. "Love seemed at first an easy thing"; but the early rapture of discovery, the delirious joy of the Beloved's mocking glances and playful reproofs, was soon followed by the long sorrow of exile.
 - .خواب P reads و خواب 8. For EB translates (or rather paraphrases) 1 4 2-3 5 6 8. Other verse-translations by GB, JP, HB.

3

MQ 3, B 8, RS 8, F 2, P 6.

.--- Metre: هزج مثمّن سالم

Order of lines: B+RS 123485679. F123546789. P as MQ.

For a detailed discussion of this poem, see my article "Orient Pearls at Random Strung" in BSOAS, xi, 4 (1946).

- 1. The Shīrāzī Turk is a symbol of fair-skinned, youthful beauty; the Hindu (black mole) is in apposite contrast. Samarkand and Bokhara are the most famous cities of ancient Turkestan—an appropriate dowry for the Turk migrant to Persian Shiraz, for Hāfiz forever the loveliest of cities.
- 2. The blue waters of the Ruknābād and the red roses of the Muşallā complete (with the ruby wine) the poet's colour-scheme, as do their melodious names his word-picture.
- 3. For lūlīs (gipsy singers) and the "Feast of Plunder", see GB, p. 151.
- 4. Self-sufficiency (istighnā) is the characteristic of the Divine beauty; God does not require our love, yet it is our overpowering need that we should love Him.
- 5. The story of Joseph and Potiphar's wife is a favourite symbol with the Persian poets of the mystic love; the foundation of the legend in the Qur'ān is found in Sūra XII, 23-54. Love for the Divine beauty lures the true lover from the chastity of formal faith to the infamy of helpless unreason.
- 6. For the first hemistich as given in the text, B+RS+F read بدم گفتی و خرسندم عفاك الله نكو گفتی, which is a tadmīn from Sa'dī. It seems probable that the variants represent the poet's own changes of mind, rather than any copyist's error.
- 7. The poet is addressing himself, rather than (as WJ and GB make out) the Shīrāzī Turk; the "wise old man" is the usual Magian elder. It is probably unsafe to conjecture from the mention of "happy youths" that this poem belongs to Ḥāfiz' early period; the phrase is used to balance the reference to the pīr; and the poem has all the marks of maturity.
- 8. An excellent statement of the poet's philosophy of unreason; bikmat is the key-word—the intellect is powerless to fathom the mystery of life: in this particular context, the paradox of the cruel self-sufficiency of beauty, drawing the lover out of the peace and safety of his formal faith and leading him onward through the wilderness of boundless suffering. Hence, his only consolation is to be found in the ecstasy of the experience of spiritual love.

9. Has this splendid close a double entendre—an appeal to the generosity of the hoped-for patron?

WJ translates 1 2 3 4 8 5 7 6 9.

Other verse-translations by GB, JP, HB, WL, RG, EGB, AJA.

4

MQ 4, B 9, RS 9, P 9.

Metre: عذوف محتق مثمن مخبون محذوف $0 - 0 - |00 - |00 - |\overline{00} - |\overline{00}$. Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 6 3 4 5 7 * 8. P as MQ.

- 1. For a full treatment of the Wild Deer theme, see no. 47. For عشق کوه P reads سر بکوه.
 - 2. The "sugar-cracking parrot" is of course the poet.
- 3. For حسنت B+RS+P read حسن . The rose is here (as frequently, cf. 44) a symbol of self-sufficient beauty; the nightingale of the helpless lover.
 - 4. For بخلق B + RS read بخلق و لطف
 - 5. Cf. 478.
 - 7. The first hemistich is a tadmin from Sa'di:

که مهربانی از آن طبع و خو نمی آید

B+RS add a line after this verse:

بشكر محبت امحاب و آشنائی بخت بیاد دار غریبان دشت و محرارا

This, however, is merely an inferior doublet of verse 6.

8. For سرود B + RS + P read چه B + RS + P read سرود TL translates 1 2 3 5 7 4 8.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

5

MQ 9, B 7, RS 7, P 8.

- 4. The "moon" is, of course, the face of the young beloved; the "polo-stick of pure ambergris", the curved black love-lock, sometimes compared with a dark cloud obscuring the radiant effulgence of the beloved's beauty; so, as here, bringing the lover to a distraction of grief and bewilderment.
- 5. For این P reads این P + P read این HB translates:
 - "I fear that tribe of mockers who topers' ways impeach, Will part with their religion the tavern's goal to reach."
- 6. This obscure line (which the commentators explain variously) is omitted by JR. HB translates:

"To men of God be friendly: in Noah's ark was earth
Which deemed not all the deluge one drop of water worth."

He adds the note: "By 'earth' is to be understood Noah himself. Although he was a mortal, his sanctity caused him to be preserved from the Flood." RS explains similarly, adding that Noah did not fear the flood at all. Indian commentators see in khākī a reference to the doctrine of Muhammad the Logos (vide R. A. Nicholson, Studies in Islamic Mysticism, p. 87), but this is surely far-fetched. The obscurity arises from the poet's desire to use the elegance of the two elements (earth and water) in a single line; for the mention of all four elements in two lines, see E. G. Browne, Chahár Maqála (transl.), p. 47. Taking the line in its context, the poet appears to be referring to himself: though the troubled world without threatens to engulf every living thing in a flood of calamities, here is one man safely lodged in the ark of his defiant faith of unreason who fears not the uttermost catastrophe; therefore, O lovely one, befriend him, recalling that all the earth's riches are but perishing dross, and come forth from your hidingplace; shake off the black lock that conceals your beauty, and look upon your lover with favour. But see Mīrzā Muḥammad in Yādgār, vol. 1, pt. 8, pp. 61-3.

9. The "moon of Canaan" is Joseph, the prototype of perfect beauty; see the note on 35 and the Qur'anic passage there referred to. The poet offers his Joseph the "throne of Egypt"—his own heart. After this line B+RS add another:

This, however, seems to be a doublet of verse 4, possibly a copyist's quotation glossing it.

JR translates 1 2 3 5 7 8 9 * 4 10. Other verse-translations by JP, JN, HB.

6

MQ 37, B 32, RS 13, F 5, Q 16.

Metre: عبين منس مخبون مقصور المحبية مثل مخبون مقصور Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 3 4 5 6 9 7 8 10 11. F 1 2 * 3 4 5 6 8 9 10 11. P 1 2 * 6 9 3 4 5 7 8 10 11.

2. Ta^{ϵ} alluq sc. attachment to other than the Divine beloved, i.e. to this perishing castle of hope, the world. After this line F+P add:

This addition certainly improves the sequence.

- . For مست خراب B + RS read مست و خراب
- 4. The sidra is a tree standing at the farthest boundary of paradise, where Muhammad had his second vision of Gabriel, see Qur'an LIII, 13-17. The poet thus compares his own revelation in the tavern with that vouchsafed to the Prophet; and in l. 11 claims divine inspiration for his poetry—a claim repeated several times elsewhere, as in 47²⁸.

- 5. It is only in the intoxication of the vision of unreason that man rises to his original home in heaven, cf. 46²⁰⁻¹, and contrast 34⁸.
- 6. The pun on the word $had\bar{a}th$ (= tale, Prophetic tradition) is clearly deliberate; the taverner has his own Traditions to recount, and the poet is acting as his $r\bar{a}w\bar{i}$; as we learn from the next verse, the taverner is here himself merely a transmitter, and states his $isn\bar{a}d$ direct; if indeed this line (7) is not merely a doublet of 6, as the repeated rhyme strongly suggests.
 - 9. The second hemistich is a tadmin from Auhadi (d. 738/1337):

The poem in which this line occurs was obviously studied by Hāfiz closely when writing the present lyric, for our poet quotes from it several times:

زروی خوب وفا جوی کاهل معنیرا

دل از تعلّق این صوت و صورت آزادست

نمودهٔ که دگر عهد می کند با ما

مکن حکایت عهدش که سست بنیادست

نصیحتی کنمت یاد گیر و بعد از من

بگوی راست که اینم ز اوحدی یادست

عاشق B+RS+F+P read بيدل 10. For

AJA translates 1 2 * 3 4 5 6 8 9 10 11.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

7

MQ 26, B 44, RS, 25 P.70.

Metre: رمل مثمن مخبون مقصور صحارب المحمد مقصور Order of lines unvaried.

1-3. The poet appears here (as elsewhere often) to describe an actual incident that occurred to him, and then to use it as a text for his meditations.

- 4. For عارفي B+RS read عارفي, which is clearly inferior.
- 5. The rūz-i alast is the day of man's creation, when God said Alastu bi-Rabbikum? (Am I not your Lord?) and man replied Balā (Yes); see GB's note on p. 153 and cf. 85; the Qur'ānic sanction is Sūra VII, 171.
 - 6. For آنچه B + RS read آنچه.
 - 7. Cf. 82.

WL translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.
Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

8

MQ 25, B 43, RS 24, P 67.

Metre: عبتت مثن مخبون مقصور $- - - - | - - - - | \overline{- - -}|$. Order of lines unvaried.

- 3. For istighnā see note on 34. The Qur'ānic sanction appears to be Sūra LXIV, 6: "The messengers (of God) were ever coming to them with clear tidings, and they said, Shall a man be our guide? And they disbelieved, and turned away. And God was independent (wa-'staghnā 'llāhu); and God is absolute (ghanī), worthy of praise."
- 4. The "double-door of the world" is clearly birth and death, see WL, p. 69, and cf. 13, 376.
- 5. The poet puns balā (yes) and balā (sorrow), suggesting that it was the cup of sorrow man agreed to drink on creation's day (se. note on 75); the fact of coming into existence meant separation from the Divine beloved, and life is a perpetual grief of separation relieved only from time to time by the ecstatic Godgiven vision of union, ever to be followed in turn by the renewal of the dark night of the soul.
 - 7. Āṣaf (Asaph) was Solomon's minister; the wind was his steed (cf. Qur'ān xxxvIII, 37; xxxIV, 12); and he understood the language of the birds (cf. Qur'ān xxvII, 16). For طرف B+RS read طرف, manifestly in error.

- 8. The sequence is perfect: it is idle to lift oneself up to worldly renown and glory, for all worldly honours are nothing worth—the arrow soars merely to fall in the dust.
 - 9. For سخنت B + RS read سخنت.

GB translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB, WL.

9

MQ 46, B 34, RS 15, P 52.

هزج مثن اخرب مكفوف مقصور :Metre ---∪|---|----

Order of lines: B+RS 1235467891011. P1243657891011.

- ı. For معشوقه B+RS+P read معشوق; but cf. l. 11.
- 2. The beautiful face of the beloved is as often compared with the full moon.
 - . بي نرگس مخمور تو ايدوست حرامست 3. P reads
- 4. For من P reads نی For گوش P reads گوشم. For چشم P reads . پر B + RS read
- ور لخطه زگیسوی For . جانوا B+RS+P read مارا For . B+RS+P read هر دم زسر زلف.
- 6. For وزشكر P reads ان چاشنى P reads وزشكر P reads وزشكر. For وزشكر P reads وزشكر P reads وزشكر.
- 7. For J B+RS+P read J . It is a common poetic legend that treasures lie concealed in ruins; the poet here gives a most elegant turn to the conceit.
- 8. The poet here summarizes the doctrine of the Malāmatī sect of the Ṣūfīs, who held that salvation lies in courting the condemnation of mankind, and acted accordingly; a theory admirable enough in itself which in later times occasioned grave scandals fatal to the repute of Islamic mysticism.

- 9. For سرگشته P reads .
- 10. For the functions of the muhtasib see R. Levy in Encyclopaedia of Islam, vol. 111, pp. 702-3. For عيش B+RS+P read شرب.
- 11. The "festival of the fast" is the 'id al-fitr, celebrated on I Shauwal to mark the end of Ramadan; and perhaps this poem was actually written for such an occasion; though it is more likely that it marks the return of an absent friend, or the renewed favour of a beloved.

TL translates 1 2 5 4 11.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

10

MQ 61, B 31, RS 12, P 37.

Metre: عبت مثن مخبون مقصور ---- المحبت مثن مخبون مقصور Order of lines: P 1 2 3 4 6 5 7. B+RS as MQ.

- 3. For the conceit, see note on 25. باد B reads بار B. For the conceit, see note on 25.
- 5. For قد و بالاى RS reads قد و بالاى. The heart is called sanaubari because its shape resembles a fir-cone; the adjective is used in modern Persian for the pituitary or pineal gland.

JHH translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

II

MQ 81, B 77, RS 58, P 48.

Metre: رسل مثمّن مخبون مقصور عبون مقصور . Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 4 3 5 6 7 8. P as MQ.

5. The garden of Iram is said to have been planted in the sandy deserts near Aden by the legendary king Shaddad, grandson of Iram; according to the Qur'an (Sūra LXXXIX, 6-8) and its commentators, it was destroyed by God in a great flood (cf. Sūra XXXIV, 16) together with its builders. Sūdī in his annotation to this verse says that the poet composed it in the Bāgh-i Iram of Shāh Shujā', ruler over extensive territories in Persia (d. 786/1384); it is certain that Ḥāfiz lived for some time at his court: he mentions him in several lyrics (see 287) and wrote a chronogram on his death.

6. The heroic king of ancient Persia, Jamshid, is said to have had a magic cup in which the whole world could be seen; similarly Alexander is credited with the possession of a mirror having identical properties. The poet meditates as always on the transitory nature of earthly glory; love is the only immortal, too great a mystery to be mouthed by man (verse 7: RL and GB have erred), too great a grief withal to be concealed (verse 8).

RL translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8. Other verse-translations by GB, JP.

12

MQ 90, B 82, RS 63, P 36.

Metre: مضارع مثمن اخرب مكفوف محذوف

Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 3 4 6 5 8 9 7 10. P as MQ.

- 1. King Solomon is said to have sent the hoopoe as his messenger to Bilqīs, the Queen of Sheba; for the full story see GB, pp. 148-9; the Qur'ānic sanction is Sūra xxvII, 20-38.
- 3. From this to verse 8 (excluding verse 7) is surely to be taken as the message sent by Hāfiz on the "wings of the morning breeze" to his faithful absent friend; the translators do not appear to have seen this.
- 7. This verse best follows verse 9 (as in B+RS) and is the completion of the heavenly message; the poet compares the wine-cup (the symbol of unreason) with the all-revealing mirror of Alexander. For this idea, cf. 155. For the significance of the heavenly messenger (verse 9), cf. 63.

- 9. The poet changes his theme with his mood; love is the supreme sorrow, and the wine-cup of unreason its only solace.
- 10. This is surely a broad hint from the poet to his patron for a royal gift, cf. GB, p. 150, and the story of Farrukhi in E. G. Browne, Chahár maqála (transl.), p. 44: "He also ordered Farrukhi to be given a horse and equipment suitable to a man of rank, as well as two tents, three mules, five slaves, wearing apparel and carpets."

GB translates 1 2 3 4 6 5 8 9 7 10. Other verse-translations by IP, HB.

13

MQ 101, B 199, RS 83, P 175.

Metre: عبت مثن مخبون مقصور کے۔ $-0-|00-|00-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}-|\overline{00}$

- 1. The poet rejects as void the solitary joys of the anchorite (the solitary, cell-dwelling Ṣūfī, cf. 2²) in favour of the convivial joys of the tavern (the ecstatics' circle). The translators miss this point.
 - 2. For the sentiment cf. 38 and note.
- 4. HB takes the point better: "With reverence grasp the goblet." The idea of the wine-cup being made of the clay of the dead, or of dead kings is a commonplace in Persian poetry; cf. FitzGerald's Rubā'iyát, xxxvii; Jamshīd, Bahman, [Kai]-kubād, [Kai]-kā'ūs and Kai-[khusrau] are ancient Persian kings; see GB, p. 165. For the catalogue of names, cf. 467-8.
- 6. For the romance of Shīrīn and Farhād (incorporated by Nizāmī into his Khusrau u Shīrīn), see GB, pp. 165-6.
- 7. One of the loveliest lines in Ḥāfiz, epitomizing his philosophy of unreason as the only solution to the riddle of the world's impermanence.

- 8. For the conceit of the treasure in the ruins, see note on 97.
- 9. For Muşallā and Ruknābād—the beauty-spots of Shiraz—see 3², 27²⁻³. The poem was perhaps written in answer to an invitation to visit a patron abroad. After this line B+RS add:

no. GB takes the alternative explanation offered by the commentators on the second hemistich; it seems more probable, however, that the poet meant by abrī sham-i ṭarab the silken string of music, balancing the allusion to the harp in the first hemistich. For the combination wine + music, cf. 38, 22².

GB translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 8 7 9 * 10. Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

14

MQ 103, B 253, RS 139, P 180.

Metre رمل مسدّس مقصور – --- ارمل مسدّس مقصور Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 3 4 5 * 6. P 1 § 2 3 4 5 6.

1. After this line P adds:

اینزمان در کس وفاداری نماند ز آن وفاداران و یاران یاد باد But it is frigid and worthless.

- 2. For باده B+RS read باده. HB glosses, "Be it sweet!" an expression used at drinking parties"; apparently reading which breaks the rhyme. The reference is of course to the sweet singing of the revellers.
- 4. For بند و بلا B + RS read بند و بلا. Does the poet intend this line ironically?
- 5. The Zinda-rūd is a famous river at Isfahan, see GB, p. 171; Hāfiz says in another place:

The poet evidently recalls a visit to Isfahan and a patron there who now neglects him. After this line B + RS add:

This, however, is merely an inferior doublet of verse 4.

6. For دريغ آن B + RS read دريغا .

HB translates 1 2 3 4 5 * 6.

Other verse-translations by JP, RG, GB.

15

MQ 142, B 123, RS 9, F sep., P 111.

Metre: رمل مثمن مخبون مقصور Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 3 4 5 8 6 7 9 10. F 1 2 6 3 4 8 * 7 9 5 10. P 1 2 3 4 8 * 5 7 9 6 10.

- 1. This is one of the finest poems of Ḥāfiz; at the same time its text exhibits remarkable variants, especially in the order of the lines. AJA in his translation follows the edition of F in his pamphlet Dil-i shaidā-yi Ḥāfiz, which may be studied with advantage as representing a vigorously new approach to the criticism of the poem. For the cup of Jamshīd, see note on 116; for the heart as a mirror of the world, cf. 127. The hadīth beloved of the Ṣūfīs no doubt underlies the train of thought:

 "Who knows himself knows his Lord."
- 2. P reads گوهر براکه ببر داشت صدف در همه عمر For با P+F reads . The poet seems to refer in the second hemistich to those "light-burthened ones of the shore", the formal Muslims (see note on 15) who will not venture upon the ocean of unreason in quest of the pearl of Divine cognition.
- 3. By nazar is meant the mystic's intuitive vision, see L. Massignon, La Passion d'al-Hallaj, p. 853. For the riddle, cf. 14 and note, 38.

- 4. See note on 127.
- 5. Can any doubt remain after this verse that Ḥāfiz intends by the imagery of the wine-cup the ecstatic's rapt vision? Note the word hakīm: God is the only philosopher; man's own man-made hikmat is unworthy of the name (cf. 38). The name hakīm is frequently given to God in the Qur'ān.
- 6. For و او B+RS+P read او For . درد B+RS+P read دور F+P read خدارا
- 7. For اين B+RS+F+P read خويش For خويش. For مقل B+RS+F+P read غير. The Sāmirī is a magician who made a calf "of saffron hue" for the Israelites to worship, see Qur'an, Sūra xx, 85 ff. The "staff" and "white hand" were symbols of Moses' divine wizardry, see Sūra xx, 18 ff.
- 8. The reference is to Ḥusain b. Manṣūr al-Ḥallāj, "martyrmystic of Islam" (d. 309/921), who was gibbeted on the charge of uttering blasphemy, notably the phrase "I am the truth". The poet explains his crime as being that of revealing the unutterable mystery of the love of God in the ecstasy of his emotion; cf. 107. After this line P+F add:

[For خاطر For فراكه P reads دلش P reads فراكه P reads فراكه P reads فراكه P reads خاطر P reads فراكه وراكه الم

10. For سلسلهٔ زلف چو زنجیر B+RS read زلف چو زنجیر. The ringlets of the beloved which veil the effulgent beauty of his face (cf. 54 and note) are also a chain to keep the lover's mad heart under restraint, else he must wholly lose his reason.

AJA translates 1 2 6 3 4 8 * 7 9 5 10. Other verse-translations by JP, HB, WL. 16

MQ 148, B 151, RS 37, P 193.

Metre: هزج مسلّس اخرب مقبوض محذوف $-- \cup | \cup - \cup - | \cup - - |$ Order of lines: B + RS 1 3 2 4 5. P as MQ.

5. See note on 75. This line gives a mystical meaning to what is otherwise the simplest and lightest of Hāfiz' lyrics, highly reminiscent in style of the early lyrics of Sanā'ī.

JP translates 1 3 2 4 5.

Other verse-translations by HB, WL.

17

MQ 151, B 142, RS 28, P 206.

Metre: هزج مثّن سالم ----| سرح مثّن سالم Order of lines: B + RS 1 * 2 3 § 5 4 6 7. P as MQ.

1. For the second hemistich cf. 14. After this line B (in parentheses) + RS add:

دیار بار مردمرا مقیّد میکند ور نه

چه جای فارس که این محنت جهان یکسر نمی ارزد

3. After this line B+RS add:

بشوی این دلق دلتنگی که در بازار یکرنگی

مرقعهای گوناگون می اهر نمی ارزد

[B reads اهرا].] This line again breaks the sequence, and is perhaps a doublet of verse 1.

5. For چه B+RS+P read بس for این طوفان (for the phrase and its significance see 5⁶ with note) P reads يك موجش. Contrast 1¹, 15²; here the poet is clearly speaking of the vanity of worldly ambition.

- 6. A splendid message to the present times!
- 7. For دنياى B+RS+P read دنياى. The poem perhaps marks Ḥāfiẓ' reaction to a failure to win the favour of a patron; unless it is all to be taken mystically.

GB translates 1 * 2 3 § 5 4 6 7. Other verse-translations by JP, RG.

т8

MQ 195, B 137, RS 23, P 131.

Metre: عبتت مثمن مخبون مقصور : Metre - ا - - - - ا مجتت مثمن مخبون مقصور : Order of lines: B + RS 1 4 2 6 3 5 8 7 9 *. P 1 3 6 4 2 7 8 5 9.

2. GB has misunderstood ju which here means "informer"; the scented breeze of morning and the flooding tears betray the secret of love otherwise well guarded. RS translates correctly:

"Dich verrieth der Wind des Morgens, Mich des Auges Wasserfluth: Und doch wahren sonst Verliebte Ihr Geheimniss treu und gut."

3. For سوكوارانند P reads بيزير. For سوكوارانند which is obviously inferior; especially in the context of the next line, where the image of the violets tossing restlessly beneath the tyranny of the fair one's locks is a superb conceit. Perhaps, however, the following emendation improves:

که از تطاول زلفت چه سوکوارانند

گذارکن چو صبا بر بنفشهزار و ببین

كه از يمين و يسارت چه بيقرارانند

Such a rearrangement gives far better balance (note the repetition of زلف) and is more in the character of the poet.

. سوكوارانند B+RS+P read بيقرارانند 4. For

- 7. Cf. 47^{6, 10}, a passage strikingly similar to the present. Khidr is confounded in Muslim legend with Elias, and is said to have guided Alexander in his quest of the Fountain of Life; see GB, pp. 158-9. Hāfiz appears to represent himself as a neophyte of these mysteries; his companions are intimate with them.
- 8. For μ B+RS+P read μ , less elegantly; the poet calls from the door of the tavern. The erghwan is the crimson Judas tree.
- 9. Cf. 15¹⁰ for the sentiment; submission is the only salvation, intellectual enquiry is profitless. After this line B (in parentheses) + RS read:

زنقش چهرهٔ حافظ همی توان دانست که ساکنان در دوست خاکسارانند

A double signature would, however, be most unusual, and the line introduces a theme extraneous to the poem.

GB translates 1 4 2 6 3 5 8 7 9 *. Another verse-translation by JP.

19

MQ 184, B 222, RS 108, P 141.

Metre: رمل مثمن مخبون مقصور : المحبون مقصور - المحبون مقصور : Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 3 5 * 4 6 § 7. P 1 2 5 3 6 * 4 7.

- 1. For the Muslim legend of creation, see GB, pp. 169-71. This and the following line appear to describe an actual vision of the poet, in which he saw himself being served with wine by angels out of a cup fashioned of Adam's dust. In his spiritual fervour he sees himself the sole heir of creation (verse 3), an idea familiar enough to the "intoxicated" Sūfīs; cf. my Niffarī, pp. 30 (8), 193-5, 156 (18). GB has not understood the poem too well.
- 2. For راه نشين B+RS read خاك نشين; cf. 47¹² and note. The second hemistich means "they sprinkled the wine of drunkenness over me".

- 3. God created man to be his vice-gerent; see Qur'ān, Sura 11, 30; VI, 166. For the Ṣūfī doctrine, see R. A. Nicholson, Studies in Islamic Mysticism, pp. 113, 130, 156.
 - 4. Cf. 'Umar Khaiyām:

می خورکه ز تو قلّت و کثرت ببرد واندیشهٔ هفتاد و دو ملّت ببرد پرهیز سکن زکیمیائی که از او یك جرعهٔ هزار علّت ببرد And Fitzgerald:

"The Grape that can with Logic absolute
The two-and-seventy jarring sects confute;
The sovereign Alchemist that in a trice
Life's leaden metal into Gold transmute."

5. For ايزد P reads اترا This line is presumably to be taken in close conjunction with the following: the "concord" is that of complete submission, which consumes the human will as the moth is consumed by the flame. For صوفيان B+RS+P read

After this line B + RS (and P after verse 6) add:

ما بصد خرمن پندار ز ره چون نرویم چون ره آدم بیدار بیك دانه زدند On the meaning, see GB, p. 171.

6. After this line B+RS add:

همچو آن خال که بر عارض جانانه زدند

7. For مخن وا بقلم B+RS+P read نگشاد B+RS+P read عن , but the text of MQ gives an excellent balance between نقل and نقاب بمخن B+RS+P .

GB translates 1 2 3 5 * 4 6 § 7.

Other verse-translations by GP, HB.

20

MQ 198, B 136, RS 22, F 6, P 135.

Order of lines: P 1 2 3 4 6 5 7 8 9. B+RS+F as MQ.

- 1. This is one of Ḥāfiz' few conversation-pieces: a curious and remarkable technique, reminiscent of the with and fearned treatises, and, in particular, the shorter mystical tracts of Suhrawardi Maqtūl, e.g. the 'Aql-i surkb' (ed. Mahdī Bayānī, Isfahan 1319/1940). The poet imagines a conversation between an old Ṣūfī and a beautiful boy who is the focus of his meditation.
- 2. The tribute of Egypt, Egypt being the wealthiest province of the Muslim empire.
- 3. For نکته دان P reads خرده دان which destroys the elegant verbal play.
- 4. The elder seeks to draw the boy forth from the tavern to the temple; the boy replies that in his religion God is worshipped through the adoration of his image in material beauty—a fundamental doctrine of this school of Ṣūfīs, and a practice which led inevitably to grave scandals.
- 6. How can the wearer of the khirqa of renunciation be a wine-bibber? The Magian faith resolves this dilemma too.
- 8. RS following the commentators identifies khwāja with Ḥāfiz' patron Qiwām al-Dīn Ḥasan (the minister of Shāh Shujā'), involving a play on the words mushtarī and mab; but this seems rather far-fetched. For تَرْمَانُ F reads
- 9. For B + RS + F + P read \overline{y} , which must surely be adopted unless the interpretation of RS is accepted, to the ruination of an otherwise perfect poem.

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9. Another verse-translation by JP. 2 I

MQ 225, B 158, RS 44, P 214.

مضارع مثمن اخرب مكفون محذوف :Metre

Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 3 4 5 * 6 § 7 8. P as MQ.

- 1. For the circumstances alleged as attending the composition of this poem, see GB, p. 173: Cypress, Tulip and Rose are supposed to be the names of three handmaidens who nursed Ghiyāth al-Dīn Purābī of Bengal during a sickness. RS quoting Sūdī explains the three cups as referring to the practice of drinking three glasses of wine after a meal to fidelity; WC speaks of three morning cups to purge the body of ill-humours. I strongly suspect, however, that the poet is here referring to a discussion (bahth) between commentators, probably of his day, on a tradition (hadīth) relating to the ritual washing of the dead; and that he intends a double entendre—winter is departed, let us lave its corpse with wine.
- 2. The dallāla is the marriage-broker whose task it is to exaggerate the beauty of the girl to the hoped-for husband; but spring is so beautiful that its beauty exceeds all that the broker could invent. GB does not appear to grasp the meaning; HB is better, albeit more pedestrian:

"Drink wine! our blooming bride, the meadow, shines forth in beauty's height;

No need of the Dallálah's practice while days like these delight."

- 3. GB: "The parrots of India are the court poets of Ghiyasuddin, and the Persian sweetmeat is the ode that Ḥāfiz sent to Bengal."
- 4. For يكساله P reads صدساله. The poem was presumably written in one night.
- 5. For جادوانهٔ عابد P reads آهوانهٔ آهو. After this line B + RS

6. After this line B + RS add:

8. The commentators identify this Ghiyāth al-Dīn alternatively as the king of Bengal (acc. 769/1367), and the Prince of Herat Ghiyāth al-Dīn Pīr·'Alī (ruled 772-92/1370-89). The name does not occur elsewhere in the Dīvān.

GB translates 1 2 3 4 5 * 6 § 7 8. Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

22

MQ 219, B 121, RS 7, P 203.

Metre: عبون مقصور عبيت مثمن مخبون مقصور Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 3 4 8 5 6 7 9 * $. P 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 $.

- 3. For روز B+RS+P read روز.
- 4. For خروج B+RS+P read بروج, which is rather a frigid metaphor: "clusters of sweet herbs, radiant as the zodiacal mansions of the sun" (HB).
- 5. The breath of Jesus in Muslim legend has power to raise the dead, cf. 158. 'Ād and Thamūd are named in the Qur'ān as unbelieving peoples who rejected the messengers sent to them by God and were in consequence utterly destroyed; see Qur'ān, Sūra VII, 65-79; XXVI, 123-59; XLI, 14-17.
- 6. Cf. 3²; the wine of unreason is the only consolation for the tragedy of evanescent beauty.
- 7. A splendid conceit; for Solomon riding the wind see note on 87.
- 8. The "faith of old Zoroaster" is of course intended here as the Magian wine-bibbing: a magnificent heresy for a Muslim to propound! For the story of Nimrod: "Nimrod, the king of the day, caused Abraham to be cast into a great fire, which was miraculously turned into a rose garden. Hence the fire of Nimrod which enflames the tulip." (WL, p. 71.) The legend is related in comment upon Qur'an, Sūra xxxvII, 97.

- 9. For Āṣaf see note on 87. 'Imād al-Dīn Maḥmūd was a minister of Shāh Shaikh Abū Isḥāq (reigned 742-57/1341-56), one of Ḥāfiz' patrons.
- 10. Tarbiyat is the technical word for the protection afforded by a royal patron to a young poet, see Niṭāmī 'Arūḍī, Chahār maqāla, p. 3018: وامّا بر پادشاه واجب است که چنین شاعر را تربیت او پدیدار آید . For this line B+RS substitute the following:

ز عيش كام ابد جو بدولتش حافظ كه باد تا بابد ظلّ رأنتش محدود In P the following is given (in B + RS additional to the preceding, B placing it in parentheses):

بيار باده كه حافظ مدامش استظهار

بفضل و رحمت عامست و غافر معهود

[The second hemistich in B+RS reads بفضل رحمت غفار بود و

WL translates 1 4 2 3 8 6 7 9 *.
Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

23

MQ 234, B 196, RS 82, P 212.

Metre: عبّت مثّن مخبون عبون عبون المعتدد ٥-٥- ا عبت مثّن عبون Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 4 3 6 5 7. P 1 2 3 4 6 5 7.

- 1. For مشرق RS reads مشرق (a misprint). For the simile, see 383.
 - 3. For حکایت B+RS read مشکایت

- 4. For مكن اى دل B + RS read مكن اى دل HB is more faithful:
- "From Heaven's inverted tray, O heart! expect not to obtain, Save by reproach and hundred pangs, one particle of gain."
- 5. For بود که این B+RS+P read باشد کاین. For باشد کاین B+RS+P read بود که این For کوهر و cf. 15². Personal suffering and divine grace are both required for spiritual attainment.
 - see note on 56.
- 7. For زلف B+RS read وصل, P reads وصل. Cf. 324. For كاله (a repeated rhyme, see verse 1) B+RS+P read باله, which is surely superior, cf. 242.

JN translates 1 2 3 6 5 4 7. Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

24

MQ 233, B 249, RS 135, P 202.

1. This is one of Hāfiz' finest and most interpolated lyrics. After this line B + RS add:

هر دم چو بی وفایان نتوان گرفت یاری مائیم و خاك كویش تا جان ز تن بر آید

The immediate repetition of the rhyme suggests that this line is merely a copyist's quotation.

2. Smoke is a common metaphor in Persian poetry for a burning sigh. After this line B+RS add:

بر خیز تما چنرا از قامت و قیامت هم سرو در بر آید هم نارون برآید بر بوی آنکه در باغ یابدگلی چو رویت

آید نسیم و هر دم گرد چن برآید

P adds the second of these lines after verse 5.

3. For زو B+RS read رخ. After this line B+RS add:

چون این دل شکسته با آن شکن برآید

which is extremely frigid.

5. Note the contrast between دست and دست; the beloved will not satisfy the material needs of the poor, much less the spiritual aspirations of the lover.

GB translates 1 * 4 5 2 $\S \ddagger 3 \parallel 6$. Other verse-translations by JP, RG.

25

MQ 254, B 292, RS 11, P 255.

Order of lines: B+RS 1235647. P as MQ.

- 2. For يبدل B+RS read عاشق. RS does not take this verse as part of the nightingale's lament; HB follows him in this.
- 3. The poem is evidently addressed to an absent friend, cf. verse 7.
- 5. A reminiscence of Qur'an, Sūra LV, 72: وَرُ مَقْصُورَاتُ فِي 3. أَكْنَام
- 6. هُوَ ٱلْغَفُور is a common Qur'anic phrase, see Sūra x, 107; xII, 99; xXVIII, 15; XXXIX, 54; XLII, 3; XLVI, 7; LXXXV, 14.

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, GB.

26

MQ 270, B 313, RS 4, P 279.

.---- Metre: خفيف مخبون مقصور .----

Order of lines unvaried.

- 3. See 25 and note.
- 7. It would appear from the form of the signature that this poem, like some others, was written by Ḥāfiz for singing by a famous minstrel; hence the poet's reference to himself in the third person. The lyric clearly belongs to the poet's early life, and is perhaps the simplest in the Dīvān.

HH translates 1 2 3 5 4 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, Derozio (in Calcutta Review for September 2, 1827).

27

MQ 279, B 322, RS 7, P 291.

.--- هزج مسدّ معذوف :Metre

Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 3 4 5 6 8 7 9. P as MQ.

- 2. For Ruknābād and Muṣallā see 3², 139. لوحش الله "beware, God forbid" is an abbreviation of the Arabic "may God not desolate". For Khiḍr, see note on 187.
- 3. Ja'farābād has now completely disappeared; see GB, p. 167, HB, p. 177.
- 4. For روح قلسى see Qur'ān, ابخواه see Qur'ān, كبوى see Qur'ān, Sūra II, 81, 254; v, 109; xvI, 104; and see GB, p. 167; cf. 159.
- 5. Egyptian sugar was (as it still is) famous for sweetness; so Hāfiz says elsewhere:

لب چو قند تو برد از نبات مصر رواج

For the "sweetmakers" of Shiraz, cf. 33.

6. For lūlī see note on 33. This poem and 3 are clearly closely related.

RG translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 8 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, GB, HB.

28

MQ 284, B 333, RS 18, P 296.

.---|---- سريع مطوى موتوف: Metre

Order of lines: B+RS 125346789. P123546789.

- cf. 63. سروش For عفو B+RS read لطف 2. For لطف
- 3. "raw" is a metaphor for "inexperienced", and is contrasted with پخته "cooked", "experienced"; in this case the "cooking" is to take place with the "fire" of the wine. Elsewhere Hāfiz says:

ز تاب آتش سودای عشقش بسان دیگ دایم میزنم جوش

5. For دانی B+RS read گوئی. WL has misunderstood the second hemistich; RS is better:

"Grösser ist die Gnade Gottes Als die Fülle uns'rer Schuld; Schweige! Kennst du denn die Gründe, Die verborgenen, der Huld?"

8. For Shāh Shujā' see note on 115. The three-line close is unusual, but explained by the panegyrical tone of the poem.

WL translates 1 2 5 3 4 6 7.

Another verse-translation by JP.

29

MQ 295, B 348, RS 1, P 303.

1. For the conventional scene, cf. 441-3.

- 2. For تیره B+RS read بچهره B+RS+P read تیره B+RS+P read تیره. تاری
 - 3. Cf. 252. EHP mistranslates.
- رير گرفته P reads سپر گرفته. For ايفاغ B+RS read ايفاغ; but ايفاغ) is said to be a Turki word meaning "fault-finder, critic", see Mīrzā Muḥammad, Ta'rikh-i-Jahán-gushá (vol. III, London 1937), pp. 298-9.
 - 6. For یکی B+RS read یکی (twice).
 - 7. A reference to Qur'an, Sūra v, 99 مَا عَلَى ٱلرَّسُولِ إِلَّا ٱلْبَلَاغُ EHP translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB (two verses only).

30

MQ 300, B 355, RS 2, P 309.

2. The first hemistich is a tadmīn from Zahīr Fāryābī (d. 598/1201-2):

مرا امید وصال تو زنده میدارد و گر نه بی تو نه جانم بماند نه اثرم B+RS read هر دم .

- . بويت B+RS+P read بويش 3. For
- رtwice). دیگران P reads دیگری (twice).
- 6. For لأنّ P reads بأنّ.
- 7. انتراك literally "saddle-strap" by which game was secured.
- . بينش B + RS read دانش 8. For

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

3 I

MQ 309, B 412, RS 47, R 319.

- . هنشين. . . نديم B+RS read همنشيني . . . نديمي 2. For
- 4. For دلستان B+RS read دلنشان.
- 6. For تیز و تلخ RS has تیز تلخ , RS has و تیز و تلخ (then
- 8. For نكته داني cf. 203. Ḥājjī Qiwām al-Dīn, minister of Sulṭān Uwais of Baghdad (reigned 756-76/1355-74), is said to have founded a college for Ḥāfiz in Shiraz; the poet praises him elsewhere. So GB, p. 154; but MQ identifies with Qiwām al-Dīn Ḥasan, minister of Abū Isḥāq Injū, see p. 162 above; and K. Süssheim (Encyclopaedia of Islam, vol. 11, p. 211) with Qiwām al-Dīn Muḥammad, minister of Shāh Shujā'.
 - 9. For عشرت B+RS read مجلس For مجبت B+RS read عشرت B+RS read عشرت

32

MQ 336, B 439, RS 74, P 380.

- 1. This famous poem is inscribed on Ḥāfiz' tomb. Cf. 4621-2.
- 2. بولاى تو "by thy love I swear".
- 3. For پیشتر B reads پیشتر (misprint).
- 5. B+RS end the poem with half this line and half of 1. 7:

که چو حافظ ز سر جان و جهان بر خیزم

- 6. For the idea, cf. 207.
- 7. B+RS omit the first hemistich, and the second hemistich of l. 5; the repetition of the phrase سر جان و جهان suggests a doublet, and the rhyme جهان is already used in l. 1. Perhaps we should emend:

The "shaking of the sleeves" is often mentioned as a gesture of world-forsaking in the Ṣūfī dance, and the phrase here balances well the idea شير بن حركات. The poem seems to have been written for recitation at the Ṣūfī dhikr; for Ḥāfiz in the third person, see note on 267.

GB translates 1 2 3 4 6 5.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

33

MQ 357, B 392, RS 27, P 385.

1. This remarkable poem is considerably interpolated. For if it is in which the Divine light rises, cf. 257. After this verse B+RS add:

قبلهٔ حاجت و محراب دعا می بینم

منصب عاشتی و رندی و شاهدبازی همانت

همه از تربیت لطف شما می بینم

2. For the immediate repetition of the rhyme (غدا مي ييمْ), cf. 30¹⁻²; 40¹⁻². The poet Sanā'ī seems to have been particularly partial to this device. The "king of pilgrims" is the commander of the annual pilgrim train to Mecca. The "house of God" is the "ancient house" at Mecca, the Ka'ba.

- 3. Cf. 1². Cathay was the famous country for musk, won from the pod of the musk-deer. The poet puns here: خطا می نیم can also mean "I see the error", i.e. of supposing that I can attain the musk-strewing locks of the beloved.
 - . نالهٔ شب آه سحر B + RS read .
 - 6. After this line B + RS add:

که من این مسئله بی چون و چرا میمیم

[RS omits جز by error.]

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

34

MQ 372, B 367, RS 2, P 329.

مضارع مثمن اخرب مكفوف مقصور :Metre ---|---|---|---

Order of lines: B+RS 1234567*8. P13245768.

- 1. For زشارع B+RS read زشارع.
- 2. Cf 75 and note.
- 4. بود is a shortened form of بود. The translator has omitted the conceit of the red onyx.
- 6. B+RS read بالت رقصند. The Mevlevi (whirling) dervishes raise their arms during their gyrations. The poet puns here on the double meaning of دست بر آوردن, which also signifies "to supplicate", i.e. for a draught of wine.
 - :After this line B + RS add . قدر B + RS + P read درّ و 7. For زان پیشتر که عمر گرانمایه بگذرد بگذار تا مقابل روی تو بگذریم

8. Since we may never attain union with the Divine beloved, let us be content with the dust of His threshold.

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8. Another verse-translation by JP.

35

MQ 376, B 393, RS 28, P 344.

Metre: رمل مثمن مخبون مقصور صلح ربل مثمن مخبون مقصور Order of lines: B + RS as MQ. P 1 2 3 5 4 6 7.

- . پیر مغانست B+RS+P read اهل دلست این و I. For
- 2. Cf. 14.
- 4. JN has misunderstood; HB is less elegant but more accurate:
 - "Heaven's organist, that robber, superior men waylays:
 At this how check my sorrow, nor clamorous tumult raise?"
 - 5. JN is again inaccurate; HB again pedestrian but correct:
 - "No wine we poured to water the rose's boiling glow;
 And so we boil from yearning in flames of hopeless woe."

He glosses: "When the summer came we drank no wine."

- 6. JN omits; HB is incorrect:
- "A fiery dew ideal from tulips' cups we drain:

 Hence evil eye! this rapture from wine nor song we gain."

But wine and music make up Ḥāfiz' specific for rapture, cf. 3⁸, 13¹⁰, 22²; and it is the lack of them (cf. lines 2, 5) that has made the poet distraught: the "imaginary" wine of the tulip's cup is better than none at all.

7. The poet says the very opposite of what JN translates; so RS:

"Wem, Hafis, kann man das Wunder Jemals mitzutheilen wagen, Dass wir Sprosser sei'n und schweigen In der Rose Wonnetagen?"

JN translates 1 2 3 4 5 7. Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

36

MQ 387, B 457, RS 15, P 407.

Metre: رسل مثمن مخبون مقصور . Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 3 4 5 6 8 9 7. P 1 2 3 4 5 7 6 8 9.

- . کای B+RS read ای 2. For
- 4. The comparison of the mystic with a mote dancing in the sunbeam is common in Persian poetry; the appropriateness of the image چرخ زنان to the whirling Mevlevi dance is obvious.
 - s. For ور B reads ور misprint).
 - 6. For من B+RS read من Note the pun . پيمان—پيمانه.
- 7. For j. B+RS read j. Ahriman was the spirit of evil and darkness in the Zoroastrian religion; his name is then extended to signify "seducer", "devil". The poet gives a remarkable picture of the conflict between profane and sacred love.
- 8. For با صبا B+RS read با صبا . 'Umar Khaiyām has a variation (how less perfect!) of this theme:

در هر دشتی که لالهزاری بودست آن لاله زخون شهریاری بودست هر برگ بنفشه کز زمین می روید خالیست که بر رخ نگاری بودست FitzGerald:

"I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Caesar bled;
That every Hyacinth the Garden wears
Dropt in her Lap from some once lovely Head."

9. For شيرين دهنان B+RS read شيرين دهنان AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9.
Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

37

MQ 392, B 453, RS 11, P 392.

Order of lines unvaried.

- 1. For کوی MQ reads کوی (misprint).
- عود P reads توان 2. For
- 5. An elegant play on words that defies adequate translation.
- 6. See 84 and note.
- 7. For على B+RS+P read منصور Shāh Manṣūr is identical with Shujā' al-Dīn, son of Sharaf al-Dīn Muzaffar, son of Mubāriz al-Dīn Muḥammad, and was a nephew of Shāh Shujā' (for whom see note on 115); after a troubled reign he was put to death by Tīmūr in 795/1393. Shāh Yaḥyā (Nuṣrat al-Dīn) his brother had an equally turbulent career. Both, rulers are mentioned several times by Ḥāfiz. For the history of the ill-fated Muzaffarid house, see Encyclopaedia of Islam, vol. 111, pp. 798-9.

WL translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB, RG.

38

MQ 396, B 459, RS 17, P 405.

Order of lines: P 1 2 5 * 4 6. B+RS as MQ.

1. This poem is in the same metre and rhyme as another by Hāfiz (MQ 395) beginning:

گلبرگوا زسنبل مشکین نقاب کن

یعنی که رخ بپوش و جهانی خراب کن

4. For the conceit, cf. 134 and note; Ḥāfiz says elsewhere: خيز و دركاسة زر آب طربناك انداز

پیشتر زانکه شود کاسهٔ سر خاك انداز

5. After this line P adds (taking the verse out of MQ 395):
همچون حباب دیده بروی قدح گشای

وین خانه را قیاس اساس از حباب کن

وى عزم B+RS read عزم جزم 6. For

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

39

MQ 407, B 477, RS 10, P 413.

- 1. A splendid meditation on a vision of the crescent moon.
- 2. For غفتيدى B+RS read غسييدى. RG's version of this poem is rather free; for a closer translation, though less poetical, see HB.
- 3. Sc. if you cut all material ties; cf. 62. P reads 9 (eisprint).
 - 4. For شب دزد P reads شبگرد.
 - 6. For عرضهٔ B reads عرضهٔ (misprint).
- 8. For زرق B+RS read زرق. The woollen robe is the mark of the Ṣūfī; cf. 425.

RG translates 1 2 7 4 6 5.

Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

40

MQ 417, B 489, RS 11, P 428.

.-- اللم :Metre مثقن اثلم :Metre

Order of lines: B + RS 1 2 3 4 5 6 * 6 $ | 7. P as MQ.

1. Ḥāfiz has another poem in the same rare metre and rhyme:

Note the play on the two meanings of mudam.

- 2. See note on 332; for the internal rhyming (rather uncommon in Hāfiz) cf. 32,9.
 - . بمستى B+RS read برندى 3. For
 - 4. For دست B + RS + P read . قول
 - 6. After this line B+RS add:

صبر از خدا خواه صبر از خدا خواه دلق ملمّع زنّار راهست صوفی بینداز این رسم و این راه وتتي برويش خوش بود وتتم از وصل جانان صد لوحش الله رخ بر نتایم از راه خدست سر بر ندارم از خاك درگاه

7. B+RS reverse درس and ورد AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Another verse-translation by JP.

از صبر عاشق خوشتر نباشد

41

MQ 428, B 487, RS 9, P 432.

. ـ ـ ـ ا ـ ـ ـ ـ ا ـ ـ ـ ـ مسدّس محذوف : Metre

Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 3 4 5 6 8 9 7 10. P as MQ.

2. For بشهر مستيش B+RS read زشهر هستيش. A splendid epitome of the poet's philosophy of unreason!

3. For عشوه P reads جرعه. RG has misunderstood this and the following line; RS is better:

"Der schöne Weinverkäufer sah Mich dann gar freundlich an, So dass ich, vor des Schicksals List Nun sicher, leben kann.

Vom Schenken mit den Bogenbrau'n Vernahm, was folgt, mein Ohr: 'O du, den sich des Tadels Pfeil Zum Ziele auserkoht!'"

- 6. Cf. 47¹³⁻¹⁵. The Anca is a fabulous bird, hence its nesting-place is unattainable.
- 7. For eads حسن For حسن; P reads وصل; P reads عشق. The literal meaning is, "What man profits of union with that royal beauty who is ever playing at self-love?" This and the lines following contain the essence of the Sūfī doctrine of Divine love: God created the world to be an image of Himself; how can the image aspire to the love of its Creator? All things, in so far as they have any meaning at all, are reflections of the Divine beauty, and do not exist apart from God. This then is the riddle of life: that we are by our very being impelled to seek the love of Him who is utterly self-sufficient and has no need of us or our love.
- 9. For this and the following line, cf. 38 and note.

RG translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 8 9 7 10.
Other verse-translations by JP, HB (four verses):

42

MQ 447, B 518, RS 24, P 470.

. --- ا --- هزج مسدّس محذوف . Metre

Order of lines: $B + R\overline{S}$ 1 2 6 3 4 5 7. P as MQ.

- I. Cf. 477-8.
- 2. Presumably the naṣāḥat is the poet's customary warning that material beauty is transient, the only course is to drink the wine of unreason; cf. 3^{7-8} .
- 4. For حم B+RS read مهر. The sentiment is similar to that expressed by Ḥāfiz elsewhere:

7. The poet, as his name indicates, knew the Qur'an by heart (ḥāfiz): in a double sense therefore he had the Scriptures in his breast!

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7. Another verse-translation by JP.

43

MQ 452, B 503, RS 9, P 492.

.--- ا --- خفيف مخبون محذوف Metre: خفيف مخبون محذوف

Order of lines: B+RS 1 2 3 4 * § 5. P as MQ.

- 1. An excellent meditation on the true and false Sufi.
- 2. The word عقيله properly signifies "noble veiled woman", and is then applied by extension to anything noble and precious. The poet is of course being sarcastic: noble reason—the religion of self-love and pride—has nothing to do with his philosophy of unreasoning love.
- 3. What better text than this to explain Ḥāfiz' use of the terms "wine" and "drunkenness" to mean the denial of reason and the annihilation of self?
 - 4. For دواى B + RS + P read . گواه After this line B + RS add: نبود باغ خلدرا رونق بي مي راوق و لب حوري

مهر آن ماه بایدت ورزید کر چه چون آنتاب مشهوری

Two singularly inept verses!

WL translates 1 2 3 § 4 5.

Another verse-translation by JP.

44

MQ 465, B 528, RS 34, P 490.

مضارع مثمن اخرب مكفوف محذوف :Metre

Order of lines: P 1 2 5 3 4 6 7. B+RS as P.

- RS reads رفتم بباغ تا که بچینم سمر گلی.
- 2. غلغل as well as meaning "clamour" also signifies the sound made by a liquid being poured out of a long-necked flagon.
 - 3. B+RS read چمن باغ.
- 4. For حسن B + RS read خار. For the second hemistich B + RS read این را تغیّری نه و آن را تبدّلی.
- 7. For فرج B+RS+P read فرج B+RS read فرج. For ورخ B+RS read ورخ.

AJA translates 1 2 3 4 5 6 7.

Other verse-translations by JP, GB, HB.

45

MQ 476, B 566, RS 72, P 445.

- 2. For راهت B+RS read راهت. RS translates: "Mein Aug' ruht auf der Strasse Rand". The phrase is omitted by RG.
- 3. For ضعيفم B+RS read فزايش. For فزايش B+RS+P read غزيزم by referring the enclitic pronoun to بخشش. B+RS read ببخش B+RS read ببخش.
 - 6. For ببندم B+RS read ببندم and so RG translates.
- 7. For بدان B+RS read بهر. Perhaps we are to conclude from this last line that the poem was addressed to an Arab friend, Hāfiz intending a pun on the double meaning of Turks.

RG translates 1 2 3 6 5 4 7.

Another verse-translation by JP.

46

MQ p. 356, B 686, RS 2 (p. 464), F 11, P 863.

. - - | - - - | - - - | متقارب مثمن محذوف : Metre

Order of lines highly irregular.

- 1. This fine poem in mathnawi verse has suffered from wholesale interpolations. I have followed the text established by F which restores perfect symmetry to an otherwise shapeless agglomeration and disembarrasses the poet of many weak lines.
 - 2. "Both parts", i.e. grace and perfection.

 - 4. For تمام B+RS read مدام
- 5. The original has "the treasure of Qārūn" (i.e. Korah). For the story of Korah, Moses' wealthy kinsman, his oppression and his overthrow, see Qur'ān, Sūra xxvIII, 76-82.
 - 7. With this catalogue of the ancient kings of Persia cf. 134.
- 9. The Persian poets often compare the world with an ancient convent, in which men lodge for their little time.
 - 10. This and the following three lines are not in B + RS.
- 12. For راى MQ+P read راى. Shīda was the son of Afrāsiyāb.
- 13. For كاخش MQ +P read قصرش For دخمهاش هم MQ reads دخمهاش بير P reads يزش
- 14. The "virgin chastely veiled" is the wine, often so called by the Persian poets.
- 17. For بر زم B+RS+MQ+P read بر درم. The word شير گير has the double meaning (both intended here) of "liontaming" and "tipsy". The "old wolf" is, as often in Persian poetry, the world, cunning and full of treachery.
 - در آن میسرشت P ;در آن می سرشت 18. MQ reads
 - . بده MQ + P read بيا For بيا MQ + P read دماغ MQ + P read دماغ

- - 23. For the ruin and the treasure, see 97 and note.
- 25. For دم از پارسائی MQ reads دم از پارسائی (breaking the rhyme), P در خسروی For در پارسائی B+RS+ MQ+P read در خسروی
 - 26. For رود MQ + P read رود زهره درود Cf.: . در آسمان نه عجب گر بگفتهٔ حافظ سرود زهره برقص آورد مسیحارا Other verse-translations by JP, HB.

47

MQ p. 354, B 685, RS 1 (p. 454), F 8, P 861.

Metre: هزج مسدّس محذوف U---| اهزج مسدّس معذوف Order of lines irregular.

- 1. I have adopted the edition of F which largely reconstructs the poem. For بسيار MQ + P read چندين.
- 2. For تنها و MQ+P read ییکس B+RS+MQ+P read ییکس B+RS+MQ+P read دو دام و RS , دد و دام و RS
 - 3. P reads 4 here and then 3.
- 4. For که P reads ایمن P reads میبینم P reads میبینی For میبینی B+RS+MQ+P read
 - . رفيقان B + RS + MQ + P read حبيبان .
- 6. For این ره سرآید MQ +P read کاری گشاید, B + RS کاری بر آید. For Khidr see note on 187.
- 7. B+RS+MQ+P here run on to the section 11-15; this line is l. 20 in B+RS+MQ, l. 19 in P.
- 8. This line is l. 15 in B+RS, l. 19 in MQ, l. 18 in P. For رخم B+RS+MQ+P read زخم

- 9. This line is 1. 14 in B + RS, 1. 30 in P; it is not given in MQ.
- 10. This line is 1. 22 in B + RS, 1. 21 in MQ, 1. 20 in P.
- 11. This line and the four following are ll. 7-11 in B+RS+P, ll. 7, 9-12 in MQ. For عطا MQ+P read وفا The poet quotes Qur'ān, Sūra 2189 (Zachariah crying to God for a child to succeed him). After this line MQ adds:

چنینم هست یاد از پیر دانا فراموشم نشد هرگز همانا But this is a very feeble verse.

- رندی MQ reads رند 12. For
- 14. For the significance of the simurgh, see note on 416.
- 16. This line is l. 16 in MQ+P+B+RS. For نیاز B+RS read نار For الله B+RS+MQ+P read نار.
- سهی This line is l. 13 in B+RS+MQ, l. 12 in P. For سهی MQ+P read ز بال B+RS read ز شاخ , MQ , و شاخ , MQ ; قال و P , و شاخ . If بال is correct, it must signify "top".
- 18. This line is l. 15 in MQ, l. 14 in P, l. 17 in B + RS. B + RS read سر چشمه و یك طرف B + RS + MQ read ...
 - 19. This line is 1. 17 in MQ + P, 1. 18 in B + RS.
- 20. This line is l. 19 in MQ +B +RS, l. 15 in P. For آيدت MQ +P read آمدت.
- 21. This line is l. 14 in MQ, l. 13 in P, l. 12 in B+RS. For MQ + P read ...
- 22. This line is l. 28 in MQ, l. 27 in P, l. 32 in B+RS. For خوانید MQ+P read بخوانید.
- 23. This line is l. 29 in MQ, l. 28 in P, l. 33 in B+RS. For انداز MQ+P read سنگ انداز.
- 24. This line and the four following are ll. 23-7 in MQ, ll. 22-6 in P, ll. 31, 34-7 in B+RS. For به تقریر B+RS+MQ+P read به بتحریر The poet refers to Qur'an, Sura LxvIII, 1 and puns on the word nūn which the commentators interpret as "fish"; he implies that his poetry is as divinely inspired as the Qur'ān, cf. 6¹¹.

- . گشت B + RS read بود For . سرشتی . . . کشتی B + RS read .
- 26. For مغز شعر نغزشعر فعز MQ reads نغز شعر نغزش, B+RS+P read و مغز B+RS read . و اجزاست.
 - . بياور P reads بيا وز 27. For
- 28. For چين P reads جين (misprint). For نه زآن MQ +P read نه نه زآن See 33³ and note: the poet repeats his claim that his poetry has a celestial origin.

Another verse-translation by JP.

48

F 10.

. - - | - - - | - - - | متقارب مثمن مقصور : Metre

- 1. F has reconstructed this poem out of lines excluded by him from the Sāqī-nāma (46); these lines are found in other editions of that composition (MQ, P).
 - . هميينم MQ +P read هميدارم .
 - وگر P reads رند For دگر MQ reads وگر . For
- 4. The idea is evidently proverbial. Cf. Fakhr al-Din Gurgānī, Vīs u Rāmīn (ed. Minovi), p. 440:

شنیدستی که شب آبستن آید نداند کس که فردا زو چه زاید For other parallels, see 'Alī Akbar Dihkhudā, Amthāl u bikam, pp. 947-8.

و ساغر MQ +P read به ساغر o.

49

MQ p. 367, B 268, RS 154, P 680.

- 1. The older editors (B+RS) printed this poem among the ghazals, but modern Persian editors place it among the muqaṭṭaʿāt. For a = b + RS read a = b + RS.
 - ع. For برد B+RS+P read برد و شد 3.
- رد کرنگست 5. B+RS read تیز و گلرنگست. Cf. 316 for the description.

Other verse-translations by JP, RG.

50

MQ p. 369, B 604, RS 31, P 692.

Metre: رمل مثمن مخبون مقصور صلحات المحتاد عبون مقصور Order of lines unvaried.

- . سرور سلطان B+RS read .
- 2. For كاف و الف . پنج و سه روز B+RS read كاف و الف . zo+ z
- 3. For اوی B+RS read اوی The phrase رحمت حق is a chronogram; the numerical value of the constituent letters is 200 + 8 + 40 + 400 + 8 + 100 = 756.

Another verse-translation by JP.

LIST OF TRANSLATORS

Arberry, Arthur John, 1, 6, 15, 20, 25, 30, 33, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 47, 48
Bell, Gertrude, 8, 12, 13, 17, 18, 19, 21, 24, 32
Bicknell, Hermann, 14
Bridges (Daryush), Elizabeth, 2
H. H., 26
Hindley, John Haddon, 10
Jones, Sir William, 3
Law, Thomas, 9
Leaf, Walter, 7, 22, 28, 37, 43, 49
Le Gallienne, Richard, 27, 39, 41, 45, 50
Levy, Reuben, 11
Nott, John, 4, 23, 31, 35
Palmer, Edward Henry, 29
Payne, John, 16
Richardson, John, 5

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

Again the times are out of joint; and again	page 13
Ah, when shall I to thy mouth and lips attain	10
All my pleasure is to sip	12
Breeze of the morning, at the hour thou knowest	12
Come, let us pass this pathway o'er	11
Come, saki, come, your wine ecstatic bring	12
Come, vex me not with this eternal spite	12
Cypress and Tulip and sweet Eglantine	10
Give, O Give love's sportful joys	11.
Go, friendly Zephyr! whisp'ring greet	8
High-nesting in the stately fir	10
Ho, saki, haste, the beaker bring	8
I cease not from desire till my desire	10
I walked within a garden fair	12
In the green sky I saw the new moon reaping	12
Ismail is dead, of men and cadis best	13
Last night I dreamed that angels stood without	10
Long years my heart had made request	9
Man of self, lifted up with endless pride	120
Monarch of firs that stately rise	120
My bosom grac'd with each gay flow'r	9:
Not all the sum of earthly happiness	100
O love, how have I felt thy pain	100
Rang through the dim tavern a voice yesterday	111
Returns again to the pleasaunce the rose, alive from the dead	10
Saki, the dawn is breaking	122
Say, where is rapture's vision? Eyes on the Loved One bending	12
Send the criers round the market, call the roys'ters' band to hear	135
Shiraz, city of the heart	110
Slaves of thy shining eyes are even those	101
Sweet maid, if thou would'st charm my sight	85
That day of friendship when we met	97
The house of hope is built on sand	89
The rose has flushed red, the bud has burst	91
The season comes, that breathes of joy	119
The secret draught of wine and love repressed	95
Thus spoke at dawn the field-bird to the newly wakened rose	94
Twas morning, and the Lord of day	112
What though a thousand enemies propose	113
When from the goblet's eastern brim shall rise	106
When my Beloved the cup in hand taketh	100

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

Where are the tidings of union? that I may arise	page 116
Where is the pious doer? and I the estray'd one, where?	84
Whither fled, wild deer?	131
Wild of mien, chanting a love-song, cup in hand, locks disarrayed	90
Wind from the east, oh Lapwing of the day	94
With last night's wine still singing in my head	125
With sullen pace stern winter leaves the plain	87
Within the Magian tavern	117
Zephyr, should'st thou chance to rove	93